Trailers on Bricks

The Damn Shames' first album performed at the Grove-KY

By Allyson Dix

"It's reckless in the right ways, steady where it counts, and never short on soul."

These are the words of Candace Barbee on the debut album Trailers On Bricks by The Damn Shames. Barbee is the marketing director for The Grove-KY in Glasgow, where The Damn Shames were special guests last Saturday night.

The band is a self-proclaimed "unapologetic set of true rockers who have turned more inward to their country and wooded upbringing". The band consists of Clayton Crowder (lead vocals/guitar), Trevor Smith (lead guitar/background vocals), Andrew Hopper (bass/background vocals), Zach Coffey (drums), and the band's newest, all-around musician: Shepherd Hieb.

The band brings classic southern swagger mixed with country flavors, giving extra pop to honest, heartfelt lyrics.

While all the band members are from Kentucky, two are a bit more local. Crowder is from Morgantown and Smith's roots are in Burkesville. The band met and formed in Bowling Green and played one of their first ever shows at The Grove.

Now, two years later, their first full-length album was released on June 20, one that the band worked with Gem City Studios out of Jellico, Tennessee, to produce.

"When we started forming this band in 2022, I had a small collection of songs I had already written that we worked up together as a band and we wrote the rest of the record together," Crowder said. "We've been chipping away at it slowly for the better part of two years now."

Crowder is the front-and-center songwriter for the group, but others pitch in on composition as well as Bowling Green native Kyle Daniels.

Crowder said he draws his inspiration for song lyrics from not only personal experiences, but also the same of others close to him. He keeps a running record of interesting things he picks up through conversations with others, so he's not just writing stories about his life, but also the lives and experiences of others. He said the songs are about the everyday lives of Kentuckians with some lyrics only local folks can relate to.

The Damn Shames is an inquisitive band name and to put the question to rest, the Barren County Progress asked Crowder how the clever name came about.

"We were recording as a part of a different band at an earlier time and we all went back to this crummy, junk roach motel in Jellico," Crowder explained. "We realized none of us really liked the songs we were recording at the time and we made the decision to start a new band."

The group stayed up into the early morning hours combing, more or less, for a new direction and a new path. In Crowder's records on his phone where he takes note of inspirational titles and phrases, they came across one he had written down in the past: The Damn Shames.

"We had us a good old laugh for a long time because that explains all of us to a T—we couldn't win for losing," Crowder said. "If it wasn't for bad luck, we wouldn't have any at all so we thought that fit perfectly and it has

June 23, 2025 Butler County Fiscal Court held its regular meeting.

The dismantling of the Woodbury Dam was brought back up. Judge Flener stated that several Fiscal Court members had met with Lee Andrews at the dam. In a letter outlining what had been discussed the following was listed.

- Landward lock wall will stay
- Outer wall will be taken down as far as possible
- Remove lock chamber doors and use debris to line landward wall and near the kayak/boat lamp.
- The other side debris will be removed and line the wall.

Kevin Phelps announced that the county officials were opposed to dropping elevation of the inner wall. They agreed to use material removed from the lock to be reused. A new road back to the RV park will be built, so one road in one road out.

They will install a gate on the inner wall, which will remain to prevent erosion. One of the things not agreed to was a fence to be replaced. Dillion Bryant asked what the end goal was? Bryant also said no studies had been done to try and predict what could happen. Andrews still insist the dam is not holding any water when it is at a normal river rate. Allen stated the only thing the county would be getting is the new road to the RV Park.

Roger Givens asked the Fiscal Court to table the decision due to the fact that the dam was built in 1838-40 by slave labor and should be considered a historical artifact and is a example of skilled art from the slave
