son, Jamon Feltner, 25, both of whom now face charges of fourth-degree assault under Kentucky law.

According to documents filed by the Lancaster Police Department, officers arrived at the scene around 4:29 p.m. following an assault complaint. Upon arrival, officers made contact with Jamon Feltner, who admitted to striking his mother, Kathryn Feltner, in the mouth. The altercation reportedly stemmed from a confrontation between Kathryn and Jamon's girlfriend. Kathryn allegedly threw a case of Bubly soda at the girlfriend, hitting her in the face and chest, which prompted Jamon to intervene by striking his mother.

Jamon told police that he was attempting to de-escalate the situation by physically separating the two women. However,

Disarming Officer
From Front

According to the Lancaster Police Department, officers were dispatched to Pemberton's residence following a complaint from his parents, who reported that Pemberton was intoxicated and causing a disturbance. Despite his parents' wishes to have him removed from the home, officers advised that Pemberton could not legally be removed unless medically cleared by EMS.

When EMS arrived to evaluate Pemberton, authorities say he became verbally aggressive. Officer Noah Allen and Officer Kirk Mays attempted to calm Pemberton, but he allegedly responded by issuing threats and demonstrating violent behavior. At one point, Pemberton reportedly claimed he would kick the officers and EMS staff, then the conflict intensified when Kathryn allegedly continued to confront the girlfriend. According to the police report, Jamon stated he took Kathryn to the ground and punched her in the back and the head in an attempt to stop the altercation.

The victim corroborated portions of the account, stating that she and Kathryn were engaged in a verbal dispute when Kathryn hit her in the face and threw the soda case, causing her mouth to bleed and possibly leading to a concussion. She added that Jamon began to assault Kathryn in response, escalating the situation.

A separate citation involving Jamon Feltner revealed additional details about a prior domestic incident. According to that report, filed by a different officer, the confrontation reportedly arose from a disagreement over a climate control device in their home. The argument turned physical when Kathryn allegedly removed the device from the wall, leading to Jamon assaulting her and causing visible injuries to her face and arms.

Both Kathryn and Jamon Feltner were arrested and transported to Jessamine County Detention Center. They have been charged with Assault in the Fourth Degree, a Class A misdemeanor in Kentucky. The charges against Kathryn relate to alleged physical violence against her son's girlfriend, while Jamon faces charges for separate assaults on both women during the course of the dispute.

Court proceedings for both individuals will take place in Garrard County. The citations have been marked as not prepayable, requiring mandatory court appearances.

The Lancaster Police Department has not released further details regarding the condition of those involved or any pending protective orders.

what the citation describes as a "public nuisance."

Given the apparent level of intoxication and concerns regarding his behavior, Pemberton was transported to Fort Logan Hospital for further evaluation before being taken to the Jessamine County Detention Center. Officer Mays accompanied the EMS crew during the transport to ensure safety.

Pemberton faces five charges, including resisting arrest, assault in the third degree on a police or probation officer, terroristic threatening in the third degree, disarming a peace officer, and disorderly conduct in the second degree.

The citation states that the charges are not prepayable, and he is scheduled to appear in Garrard County court.
