participants until they start earning money once they begin working on the farm. At that point, they pay $100 a week for food, housing, clothing and transportation. They earn $10 an hour the first 90 days, then get a raise to $15 to $17 an hour. The goal is to keep men in the program for a year as opposed to other recovery programs that run for 30, 60 or 90 days. That allows bonds to form among the group, instills confidence and gives the men time to rebuild their lives and relationships with their families.

But for every success story, there are some who don't last. "They come in here and they think that they're ready and they're really not ready," Taylor said. "They don't have a gift of desperation to where they've got to change and they've hit the bottom and they have to be willing to do a lot of little stuff that's aggravating and challenging." That includes rising at 4:30 a.m., cleaning their room, keeping the public areas spotless.
