

Frazier History Museum launches new podcast ‘Kentucky Wide’

Happy birthday, Kentucky! The state of Kentucky was admitted to the Union on June 1, 1792.

This year, the Frazier History Museum is excited to share its gift for the Commonwealth: a podcast called Kentucky Wide.

Kentuckians throughout history have changed the world in many ways, and it's the museum's mission to share their stories. Over the years, its learned so many great stories about people and places from every county in the state. Last year, these stories led to the 120: Cool KY Counties exhibit. Now, some of the museum's favorite people and places will find their way to your ears with music and deep storytelling.

Kentucky Wide is an audio celebration of the Commonwealth hosted by the Frazier's Mick Sullivan and Sarah Jemerson, with contributions from many on the staff. The Frazier will release new episodes every two weeks through the summer of 2025.

Kentucky Wide features stories from Jessamine County to Jefferson County, Daviess County, and beyond, showcasing some of the ways Kentucky has reached the world. The first episode — available now — features the stories of four Black photographers from Kentucky: the Smith brothers, who were twins from Nicholasville; Moneta Sleet from Owensboro, and Bud Dorsey of West Louisville.

Upcoming episodes feature other notable Kentuckians, including the 79" giant Martin Van Buren Bates of Letcher County, Gilded Age wedding dress designer Madame Glover of Louisville, and murdered Civil War general "Bull" Nelson from Maysville.

It's truly a team effort with fellow Frazier staffers Jason Berkowitz, Megan Schanie, Simon Meiners, Amanda Briede, Nick Cook, and Kent Klarer lending hands with writing, art, and sound design.

You can find Kentucky Wide wherever you find your podcasts: Apple, Spotify, Amazon/Audible, and iHeart. And remember: Kentucky Wide is a podcast production of the Frazier History Museum, where the world meets Kentucky!
