of my desire, I was reminded of a book written by Thomas Wolfe: "You can't go home again." Perhaps that is best else we might live in the past and forfeit both the present and the future. Our memories are dear to each of us, and they should teach us, comfort us, and perhaps warn us. Do not let them die, and yet life is here, life is now, and life must be lived in such a way as to make a difference for good.

I went back today, but it wasn't the same. I suppose it is well that it was not, or I may have become lost in another time while giving up all claim to today. Far too many times, we within the Lord's church, are guilty of trying to go back to the way we remember it being in such a time as the sixties. We may be trying to restore a traditional way of doing things rather than the New Testament order of action. Change for the sake of change is not necessarily good, in fact sometimes it is damaging to all that we need to be. The church of Jesus Christ must hold on to its distinctive nature, but not always its man-made traditions.

The gospel is unchanging. How we reach people in order to present the gospel needs to be adapted to the times in which we live. The methods that once seemed so grand and glorious as we grew up may now seem small and weak. I suggest that society is different now. I suggest that the gospel is still the power of God unto salvation, but I also suggest that we take a long, hard look at how we present that gospel, and whether we are answering the questions on men's lips, or whether we are stuck in the sixties answering questions that are no longer being asked and doing things the way we always remember them being done. To do the same things in the same ways repeatedly and expect different results could be said to be the definition of insanity.
