AFTER COVID

Reporters explore how the pandemic changed our lives

Elizabeth B. Kim
Cincinnati Enquirer
USA TODAY NETWORK

It's startling to think that COVID shutdowns began five years ago.

And it's even more mind-boggling to reflect on all the ways that the pandemic continues to affect our lives.

That's probably the reason why editors at The Enquirer assigned this story on the fifth anniversary of the COVID shutdowns in March 2020 to seven reporters across four teams. We collaborated to examine how the pandemic changed the way Americans work, learn, vote, eat and worship.

Taken together, a somewhat cohesive picture of society's uneasy transition to the post-COVID era begins to emerge.

In-person socializing seems to have declined since before the pandemic. Working in offices and eating at restaurants was often replaced by remote work and take-out, and in churches there aren't as many worshipers filling out the pews.

Students experienced losses in academic and social skills that they don't seem to have recovered from, and COVID deepened political schisms in Northern Kentucky and beyond.

Relying on data in our reporting helped us define the scope of the changes, while interviews with teachers, elected officials, restaurant owners, health care workers and priests in our community helped us fill in the details of how Greater Cincinnati was transformed by the pandemic – perhaps forever.

OUR HISTORY

Book captures Rose's life in newsprint

Jeff Suess
USA TODAY NETWORK

The cover, above, and pages, below, of "Pete Rose: A Tribute to a Baseball Legend," published by The Enquirer and Pediment Publishing. THE ENQUIRER AND PEDIMENT PUBLISHING

Last fall, The Enquirer ran repeat history columns from the vault while I was on special assignment. Many folks wondered what I was up to.

Well, I spent those months planning and editing a book commemorating the life and career of baseball's Hit King, Pete Rose.

The Enquirer partnered with Pediment Publishing to produce a 160-page hardcover book, "Pete Rose: A Tribute to a Baseball Legend," featuring stories and more than 200 images pulled from The Enquirer archives, plus a new foreword by Marty Brennaman.

The book is available to order at PetePictorial.com and at local bookstores.

To collect the material for the book, I dug through six decades of articles on Pete and thousands of photographs, starting with his rookie season with the Cincinnati Reds in 1963 on up to the tributes after his death on Sept. 30, 2024.

The book is finally out now, just in time for the buildup to Opening Day.

Photos and news stories tell the Pete Rose story

We started with the cover. That's not the usual process, but Pediment Publishing works quickly, partnering with news organizations to publish books almost as soon as the events happen.

The day I got the assignment, I saw an ad online for preordering the Pete Rose book – the one I hadn't made yet.

First, a cover was needed for the advertising. We wanted an image that captured the essence of Pete Rose and how he played the game. A 1972 photo by The Enquirer's Ed Reinke did the trick, showing Pete sliding headfirst into home plate, beating the tag in a spray of dirt.

That's why he was called Charlie Hustle.

Pete Rose's story is told through 19 articles selected to show Rose in each stage of his career "straight from the journalists who covered him closest." That was a phrase the publisher used, and it guided my approach in selecting the stories.

Longtime Enquirer readers may recognize old bylines of sportswriters Bob Hertzel, Bill Ford, Tim Sullivan, Greg Hoard, John Erardi and John Fay. Most of the stories used in the book were written by reporters on the scene, doing interviews in the locker room after the game, capturing the moment.

But there's also Paul Daugherty's story when he accompanied Pete to his boyhood home on Braddock Street in Riverside, and Pete's last sit-down interview with The Enquirer's Gordon Wittenmyer in Las Vegas last summer.

Even as a writer, I know it's all about the photos. So, I felt it was important to select images that helped tell the story without relying on the words. There had to be endless amounts of photos of Pete Rose swinging a bat.

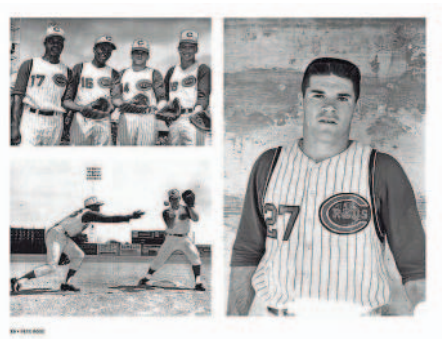

We have action shots of young Pete playing for Western Hills High School, and his first Opening Day with his parents in the stands at Crosley Field.

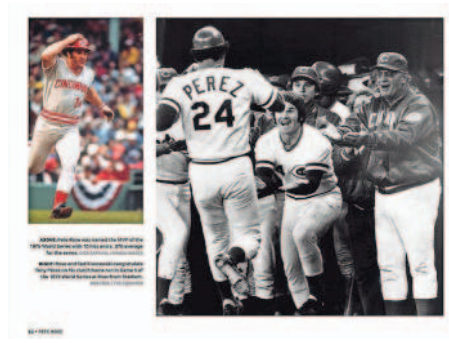

Ah yes, Crosley. That's a character in this story, as well as Riverfront Stadium. Just looking at photos of the different uniforms over the years is a hoot.

We also see Pete Rose off the field. An Enquirer photographer was there at the steps of St. William Church in Price Hill when Pete and Karolyn Rose were married in 1964. Remember when Rose opened a restaurant near Western Bowl? Or when he had his own Pete chocolate-flavored beverage? How about when he was a sportscaster on WKRC-TV?

Cartoons add another perspective – Pete as drawn by the talents of Jim Borgman and Jerry Dowling. The Enquirer used to have a sports editorial cartoonist. Dowling covered most of Rose's career with the Reds (and created the famous image of the Big Red Machine as a contraption bulldozing other teams).

Pete Rose was both loved and criticized

It is interesting to see how Pete's story unfolded at the time, rather than in retrospect.

Even during his rookie season, the media paid close attention to Rose as a homegrown talent. Reading the game stories offers insights into how he was regarded by players, fans and the media in key moments of his career.

Rose was criticized for plowing over catcher Ray Fosse to win the 1970 All-Star Game at Riverfront Stadium because it was a meaningless game. (Although Enquirer sportswriter Bob Hertzel blamed Fosse for blocking the plate without the ball.)

The same for the brawl with Mets shortstop Bud Harrelson after sliding hard into him at second base. "I'm no little girl out there," Rose said then.

Rose eventually became a massive star in Cincinnati. His every at-bat was followed closely in 1978 as he reached 3,000 hits, then went on a 44-game hitting streak. It built up to what seemed like a fairy tale ending – his record-setting 4,192nd hit, in his hometown, on Sept. 11, 1985.

Back then, The Enquirer published the book "Pete Rose: 4,192," written by John Erardi, which has a terrific write-up of the atmosphere of the day, the crowd, the hoopla and Rose's emotional response. We included that chapter in the new book.

But we didn't shy away from the elephant in the room – Rose's banishment from baseball for gambling and his 35-year quest to be reinstated. That's also part of the Pete Rose story.

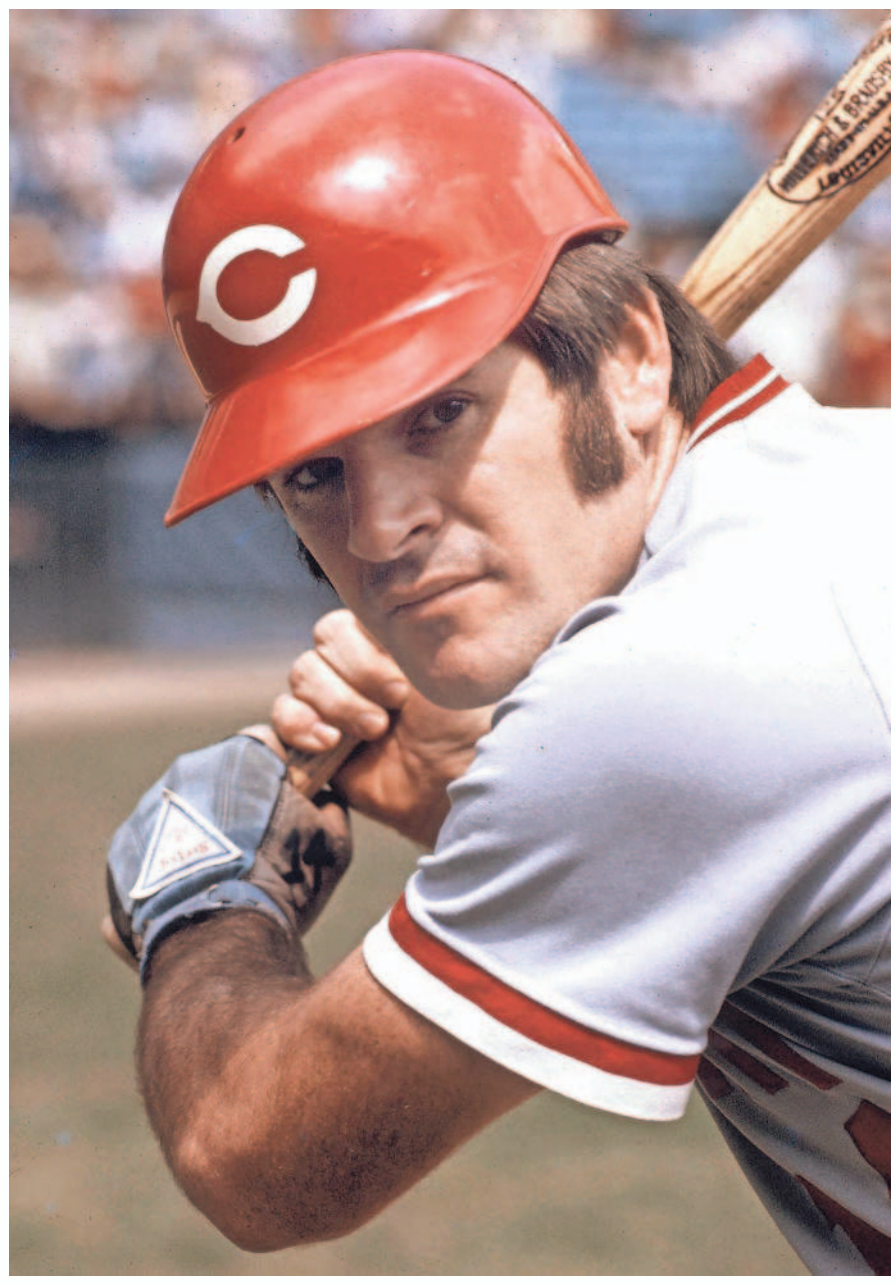

It's the story of a West Side boy taught to play baseball to the high expectations of his father, with grit and hustle. Of a ballplayer who didn't have the most talent but gave his all on every play. Of a man whose competitive drive led him to the hilltop and over the edge.

A story more tragedy than fairy tale.

But he was a heck of a ballplayer, that's for sure.

Unhoused people 'gotta hide' after new Ky. law

COVINGTON, Ky. – Joseph Boles used to camp with a group of guys near the Ohio River. It was safer that way because he'd be less likely to have his things stolen when he was around people he knew, he said.

That was before state lawmakers passed the Safer Kentucky Act last year, which targets people living on the streets by making it illegal for them – or anyone else – to sleep in undesignated spaces.

Anyone cited with the offense for the first time can be fined. Subsequent offenses are Kentucky Class B misdemeanors and can bring more fines or jail time.

"The idea that people feel entitled to just plop down wherever they want and live is something that people resent because it was disruptive," said former state Sen. John Schickel, who supported it.

While the law was intended to make people feel safer in public, it's made life worse for people living on the streets.

Boles said about a half dozen police officers showed up at the tucked-away campsite he and his friends had set up on the riverfront last summer.

"They said they passed that new law and we can't be here no more," he said.

But the new law didn't provide more resources or funding for people experiencing homelessness. It left Boles and other unhoused people with few options but to dodge police.

"You just gotta hide from them. It's hard," Boles said. "Ain't no help for the homeless out here."

Joseph Boles, 47, said that police told him about Kentucky's new "unlawful camping" law last summer.

John Miller, 62, told The Enquirer he has experienced periodic homelessness for the past three years.

"They have to sleep somewhere"

One of Schickel's friends is a business owner in Florence. According to the former lawmaker, several unhoused people set up camp near a parking lot customers use.

"They got very aggressive with him when he asked them to leave," he said, but this was after the new law was passed.

"So the police came and told them if they didn't leave they were being arrested. And they left," Schickel said.

That's the kind of power and discretion intentionally built into the law.

At least 266 charges were filed at district courts throughout Kentucky from July 15 to Dec. 31, according to recently released data from the Kentucky Center for Statistics, a government-run data hub.

The Northern Kentucky data shows, however, that local police aren't writing many tickets for unlawful camping.

Three charges were filed in district court in Kenton County and three were filed in Campbell County. None were reported in Boone County.

"Our police officers do use discretion. They don't want to cite people," Schickel said. "They just want to have an atmosphere in the communities where people feel safe to use public spaces."

Professor Dennis Culhane, who teaches social policy at the University of Pennsylvania, has a different word for how laws like unlawful camping are often being enforced: intimidation.

He's spent decades researching homelessness and assisted housing policy. In that time, Culhane has found that laws like the ones making camping illegal don't work.

"They have to sleep somewhere. They're not going to just disappear," he told The Enquirer, referring to unhoused people. "It just points out the fact that we don't have a sufficient safety net for people who experience homelessness."

How a $25 ticket cost taxpayers $410

John Miller of Northern Kentucky said he has experienced homelessness on and off for the past three years. The key to living on the streets?

"Don't be noticeable," he said, and that means something different since the new law passed.

He used to camp with a group of guys he knows. Now, he's able to sometimes snag a few hours of sleep in a stairwell or entryway.

Police have caught him a few times. They usually just verify his identification, ensure he doesn't have any warrants, and let him go with a warning about unlawful camping, Miller said.

Not everyone is as fortunate. Last summer, a man was ticketed for sleeping under a staircase at a shopping center in Highland Heights, court records show. It was the second time police were called about the man in a week.

An officer issued him a $25 fine. After fees, the man owed $180.

He didn't pay it. Instead, he eventually served about two days in jail where he accrued jail fine credits. That means for every day he spent in custody, money was credited toward his fines.

On average, it costs about $128 per day to house someone at the Campbell County Jail, a public records request revealed.

After fees and the cost of incarceration, that $25 ticket cost taxpayers at least $410.

"They can't come up with $150. It's an excessive fine for someone who's destitute and has no income," Culhane said.

Culhane added that putting financial burdens on unhoused people further puts them in a cycle of poverty, he said, with them possibly unable to find a job or housing because of their criminal conviction.

But there are better policies that would help the public and unhoused people, advocates for those experiencing homelessness say.

What works to get people sleeping in homes, out of stairwells?

The Emergency Shelter of Northern Kentucky is the the only facility in the area that offers overnight stays year round to anyone who needs it.

It's based in Covington, has 68 beds and acts as a general resource hub for people in need.

Last fiscal year, 1,428 of the people who sought services at the shelter were experiencing homelessness for the first time. More than half were able to find a new place to live within two weeks.

Kim Webb, executive director at the ESNKY, said that's because the system in place at the shelter works. It gets people off the streets and living independently.

More resources for emergency shelters and an investment into affordable housing are the two biggest things she said would help transition people into homes.

"Without that, you're going to continue to see a growing unsheltered population," she said.

Madeline Mitchell
USA TODAY NETWORK

The teachers' union president for Sycamore Community Schools is back to work after the district received several complaints that she was intoxicated during a September school board meeting and made a racially charged comment about a district administrator.

"Oh look, an incompetent Black man in the photo," Danielle Scrase said during the meeting, referencing Sycamore High School Principal Taylor Porter.

Scrase, 54, admitted she made that remark during the district's investigation into the incident. But she said she does not think Porter is incompetent because he is Black, and argued that it wasn't discriminatory.

The Enquirer obtained copies of the district's investigation and Scrase's personnel file through an Ohio Open Records Act request. Scrase, a science teacher and president of the Sycamore Education Association, declined to comment on the matter, as did the school district.

Sycamore Community City Schools serves nearly 6,000 students in Cincinnati's northeast suburbs, including Blue Ash. As president of the Sycamore Education Association, Scrase represents more than 500 teachers and other staff members in contract negotiations with the Sycamore school board.

Teacher appears to have 'hit the sauce' before attending school board meeting

Two district employees and a community member reported that Scrase acted inappropriately during the Sept. 18, 2024, school board meeting, prompting an investigation led by Assistant Superintendent Brad Lovell.

During the investigation, several other staff members told Lovell that Scrase smelled of alcohol at the meeting. They described her behavior as odd, erratic and unprofessional. Scrase "had difficulties sitting still," the documents say, and made comments aloud to herself throughout the meeting. She also texted some staff members.

"U know Ur a joke Rite? And ur lucky 2 have ur job and pay," Scrase texted to Mallory Bonbright, the district's community relations director, during the board meeting.

And other staff members texted each other about Scrase.

"Does Danielle Scrase like to drink?" Brody Burson, assistant treasurer, texted to Jenni Logan, the district's treasurer. "She spoke to me and it appears she may have hit the sauce prior to coming."

Documents say Scrase later admitted to having a bourbon drink before attending the meeting.

The records say she also pulled her pants down in a common area, twice, both caught on surveillance video, "exposing your bare buttocks, while walking towards the restroom." In her rebuttal, Scrase said this didn't happen in a "common area" because she went to another part of the school building to use the restroom during the board meeting and was the only person in that part of the building during that time.

At one point, Porter, Sycamore High School's principal, introduced the school board to student leaders with the Black Student Union. Those students presented about an event they attended at Great American Ball Park to network with historically Black colleges and universities, according to the meeting minutes.

Scrase sat in the back of the room. While Porter was taking photos of the Black Student Union and helping the organization present to the school board, at least two district administrators heard Scrase refer to Porter as an "incompetent Black man." She didn't direct that statement to anyone in particular, according to the complaints.

During the investigation, Scrase admitted to stating, "Oh look, an incompetent Black man in the photo," but she said it was uttered "under my breath" and she didn't mean for anyone to hear her.

Racist remark or 'just a description'?

In the documents, Lovell writes that he found Scrase violated a board policy protecting students and staff from discrimination based on race. A month later, Scrase disputed those findings.

"It was spoken quietly to myself and was not within earshot of any family members in the audience because their chairs were several feet away from where I was sitting," Scrase wrote in her appeal to Lovell's findings.

"Some background," she added. "I grew up in an Italian family where talking aloud to oneself is part of our culture."

But at least one district parent emailed the school board after the meeting to report Scrase's "bizarre behavior." Tiffany Anderson didn't name Scrase in her email, but described what Scrase looked like, what she was wearing and where she sat in the meeting room.

"It seemed like she may have been under the influence of drugs or alcohol," Anderson wrote. "She was slurring her speech, jumped into a photo with my child, even though she's not involved with my student's group, and even attempted to kiss our students advisor."

During the investigation, Scrase submitted a note from her doctor that says she was treated with muscle relaxants and "unknowingly, she consumed a mixed drink" which may have made her more intoxicated.

Scrase said her comment about Porter was "just a description." She denied that Porter is incompetent because of his race, but said she does think he is incompetent. Scrase did not explain why she included Porter's race in her comment, Lovell wrote after investigating.

In his findings, Lovell wrote that Scrase "needlessly invoked Mr. Porter's race for no apparent purpose other than to suggest it is linked to his alleged incompetence." That kind of statement, he said, might "play into the pernicious stereotype that Black people, and in particular Black leaders, are incompetent because they are Black."

Scrase back to work, remains teacher union president

In January, Scrase filed a grievance against Lewis because of the unpaid suspension, saying Lewis has a history of retaliatory behavior against her.

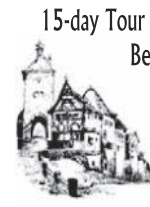

The school board approved a settlement with Scrase later that month. As part of the agreement, Scrase dismissed her grievance against Lewis and agreed not to talk about it again. She is also required to attend counseling sessions and undergo an independent medical evaluation by a medical professional with substance use training.

In turn, the school district agreed to remove records referencing Scrase's inappropriate behavior from her personnel file and reduced her 45-day unpaid suspension to 15 days. So instead of returning to work on March 6, Scrase returned to the classroom on Jan. 23.

Scrase has worked for Sycamore Schools since 1999 and has been Sycamore's teacher union president since 2017. Her personnel file is filled with dozens of notes of appreciation from union members encouraging her to stay positive during the investigation and her unpaid leave, and hoping she is "back at Sycamore ASAP!"

"I am so sorry you are going through what you are going through," Sarah Evans, a special education teacher at Sycamore High School, wrote. "Know we have you(r) back!"

The school district confirmed Scrase remains president of the teachers' union on Friday.

CINCINNATI AFTER COVID

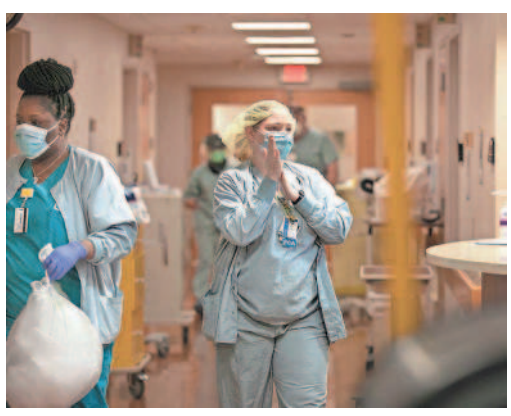

How the pandemic changed the way we live

Five years ago, millions of Americans began asking the same question. • How long will this go on? The COVID-19 pandemic was just getting started and the world as most had known it was changing in ways that would affect the lives of everyone. Kitchen tables became homework spaces. Schoolchildren got their lessons on laptops via Zoom. The term "essential worker" became synonymous with doctors, nurses and the checkout clerk at the grocery store. • Everything seemed to be changing, all at once, and no one knew how long it would take to return to normal. • Today, Americans still don't know. The pandemic is over, but if normal means a return to life as it was before the pandemic, this isn't normal. • From the way Americans work and play to the way they vote and worship, the pandemic continues to touch lives every day. Enquirer reporters set out to examine how and why. See COVID, Page 9A

COVID

For children, there's no place like school

Most students can't learn if they aren't physically at school. Nothing proved this better than the COVID-19 pandemic. When schools sent students home to learn remotely in March 2020, a lot of educators thought it was a temporary inconvenience. But some districts, including Cincinnati Public Schools, continued to close for COVID-19 outbreaks well into 2022.

Karen Eads, a Norwood City Schools elementary teacher, said the first graders who came to her classroom after remote kindergarten weren't the same as students she'd taught in the past. Some didn't know their letters and numbers, how to count or what sounds each letter makes. "They usually know those kinds of things when they get here," Eads told The Enquirer in 2021.

Learning losses fueled by the pandemic persist today, despite the millions of dollars the federal government funneled to schools in hopes of bringing struggling students up to speed. According to the Education Recovery Scorecard, students lost about half a year of instruction in math because of the pandemic, and nearly a third of a year of instruction in reading.

Their social skills suffered, too. Being away from other kids for so long left them ill equipped for the most basic interactions. "Working together collaboratively, sharing, things of that nature," said Eugene Blalock Jr., superintendent of North College Hill City Schools. He and his teachers also have noticed students are more "easily angered or agitated" these days.

This combination of academic and social regression among students has left teachers to bear the brunt of kids' bad behavior, while working overtime to get students back on track. School leaders are getting creative to address these needs – with some making more drastic changes than others.

Blalock's district, for instance, was the first in the region to switch to a four-day week after the pandemic.

The goal, Blalock said, is to give teachers more time to plan lessons and use data to drive instruction that will "meet the students where they are."

Remote work is a pandemic survivor

After the pandemic was declared in March 2020, stay-at-home orders and an overall state of panic among many employees meant millions of office workers would be working from home.

Downtown work hubs, including Cincinnati's, emptied in a hurry. Five years later, many companies are requiring employees to return to the office, while others embrace the work-from-home ethos as a new way of doing business.

"We're seeing a gradual shift back to working in the office, but we're also seeing some smaller companies moving in the opposite direction," said Colleen Pfaller, a consultant with Cincinnati-based One Digital, a human resources and consulting firm.

"Some companies see (remote work) as an employee benefit and are just now offering it for the first time to help them stand out and give them a competitive advantage" when it comes to recruiting, Pfaller said.

She said a strong labor market over the past several years has helped shift power to employees who may insist on remote or hybrid work options or threaten to leave. "I think work-from-home will be permanent," Pfaller said.

That's especially true for younger workers in the computer and tech industries, where the competition for highly skilled workers puts employees in the driver's seat. In the Cincinnati metropolitan area, 39.6% of millennials (ages 27 to 44) worked off-site, making up the largest group of remote workers in the area, according to a recent analysis of Census data by CoworkingMag – a digital magazine.

Millennials were followed by Generation X (ages 45-60), which made up 34.5% of remote workers and Baby Boomers (ages 61-79), who accounted for 17.2% of remote workers.

Overall, 13.2% of workers were working remotely or in a hybrid manner at the end of 2023. Before the pandemic, fewer than 6% did so. Cincinnati companies like Procter & Gamble, GE Aerospace and Cincinnati Financial all still have at least some portion of their office employees working a hybrid schedule that allows two days or more of work from home.

One of the consequences of all that remote work is a surge in unused office space in Cincinnati and around the country. According to Moody's Analytics, office vacancy rates reached 20.4% last year, compared to 16.4% in 2019.

■ POLITICS

Pandemic worsened our political divide

SOURCE: University of South Florida national survey, 2023 THE ENQUIRER

The political divide is deeper than ever

TJ Roberts wanted to get out of political activism and focus on law school in 2020. Then the pandemic hit, and Roberts made politics an even bigger part of his life.

Roberts

He now serves as a state representative for almost 50,000 people in Northern Kentucky.

Roberts, a Republican, is part of a new era of politicians on both sides of the aisle who ran for office in the months and years after the start of the pandemic. Some were moved by the impact of COVID-19 on the poor or by other social issues. Others, like Roberts, voiced loud opposition to government shutdowns, mask requirements, church closures and mandatory vaccinations.

Roberts was one of several people who filed a lawsuit against Kentucky Gov. Andy Beshear when he banned mass gatherings, including church on Easter Sunday. They said Beshear was violating their religious freedom and a judge agreed.

Beshear had to pay $270,000 in attorney's fees. When Roberts ran for office in 2024, he handily beat his GOP opponent and won the general election with 70% percent of the vote. His race was emblematic of a schism among more traditional Republicans and those, like Roberts, who embraced President Donald Trump and far-right positions. "What we see right now," Roberts said, "it wouldn't have happened without COVID."

The reason, he said, is that before COVID most people didn't think much about the government's ability to impact their lives unless they got pulled over for speeding or didn't pay taxes on time. COVID-era restrictions and the uneven economic recovery that followed flipped that narrative.

According to the Pew Research Center, trust in federal institutions, elected officials, the U.S. Supreme Court and public health professionals plummeted in the wake of the pandemic.

"That was the thing that really just brought me back in" to politics, Roberts said. "The government is never going to stop trying to trample upon the fundamental liberties of the people."

Strong feelings like those have deepened the nation's political divide, contributing to heated rhetoric over any number of issues, from immigration to abortion. And major differences remain in how Republicans and Democrats view public health and vaccines.

Beshear, the Democratic governor whose response to COVID inspired Roberts' new political activism, has lamented the pandemic's impact on national discourse.

"COVID should have never been infused with politics," he said in 2021.

Health care employment bounces back but not everywhere

COVID-19 didn't lead to a mass exodus of health care workers, as some experts predicted during the traumatic first year of the pandemic.

But it did shake up the health care industry. While employment is strong today in hospitals and physicians' offices, nursing homes and other facilities still haven't recovered and struggle to find enough workers to care for patients.

"There was, at a certain point in the pandemic, a lot of discussion about

'Our numbers are just staggering right now'

Local soup kitchen distributing record number of meals

Elizabeth B. Kim Cincinnati Enquirer
USA TODAY NETWORK

People in Cincinnati are hungry. Maybe hungrier than ever, if you look at it from Georgine Getty's view.

"We did 838 meals on Jan. 27," said Getty, executive director of Our Daily Bread. "That was the day after our 40th anniversary."

It was the highest number she's seen in the soup kitchen's history, ever since the organization first started counting meals distributed nearly a decade ago.

From 8 a.m. to noon, the kitchen buzzes with staff cooking and preparing to-go boxes for a line of guests that stretches from one end of the cafeteria to the other. The soup kitchen's nap area, a quiet room adjacent to the cafeteria, remains similarly crowded.

Last year, Kentucky banned unhoused people from sleeping outside, which may have caused Our Daily Bread to draw in more people from Northern Kentucky. But Getty believes that the soup kitchen's rising number of visitors is an indication of increasing homelessness and food insecurity in Cincinnati.

"We're the canary in the mine," Getty said. "And our numbers are just staggering right now."

Daily meals surpasses COVID-era record

The last time Our Daily Bread broke a record for meals was in 2020, according to data provided by the organization, when it was the only soup kitchen open due to COVID.

But the number has kept climbing. In late 2024 through the beginning of this year, Our Daily Bread regularly surpassed its all-time peak of handing out 783 meals in a single day, in 2020.

Our Daily Bread isn't the only place seeing more hungry people line up for food.

More people are visiting Walnut Hills-based food pantry Queen City Kitchen, according to executive director Hugh Ralston. And Freestore Foodbank, which distributes food to more than 600 emergency food pantries across the area, has seen a 35% increase in meals distributed between 2023 and 2024.

Kurt Reiber, president and CEO of Freestore Foodbank, says that many Cincinnati area families are struggling with higher prices of groceries.

"About 65% of the families we serve are working families," Reiber said. "They don't make enough money to make ends meet."

'I come here all the time'

Ronnetta Thompson, 39, arrives at Our Daily Bread every morning when it opens, at 8 a.m. sharp.

"I come here all the time," said Thompson.

For Thompson, who was diagnosed in 2016 with an autoimmune disorder known as lupus, eating a well-balanced meal is especially important.

"I'm used to being in pain," said Thompson, who's currently living in a shelter as she looks for permanent housing. "I'm always tired."

Stress causes her fatigue to flare up, so she prays frequently to keep up a positive attitude.

Visiting Our Daily Bread helps her keep up a routine. Thompson remembers seeing her grandmother working there when she was 6 years old, so the soup kitchen and its staff always feel like home.

The food's gotten better recently, joked Thompson, who said some friends of hers visit Our Daily Bread simply to get out of the cold for a few hours. Still others stop by to share a meal with their kids, take a nap or meet with their case managers.

Like Getty, Thompson has noticed longer lines since January's cold snap.

Hundreds of Cincinnatians braved the cold on Feb. 8 to participate in the Cupid's Undie Run. The event was held at Queen City Radio on Central Parkway. The run raises funds and awareness of neurofibromatosis, which is a genetic nerve disorder. In addition to Cincinnati, Cupid's Undie Runs were held in 33 other cities across the United States. JUST ASKIN'

What is all of the construction by I-75 near the Lateral?

Bebe Hodges
USA TODAY NETWORK

The Enquirer's Just Askin' series aims to answer the questions that no one seems to have an answer for, not even Google.

If you've recently driven on I-75 North near the Norwood Lateral, you've noticed a hill to your right all dug up with construction equipment.

Drive another few minutes and you see more construction work on your far left. This is the land next to the westbound side of I-75 South. We're used to seeing the Ohio Department of Transportation do work on highways, but what could they be doing on the sides of them?

The Enquirer spoke to ODOT spokesperson, Kathleen Fuller, to find out.

What's up with the construction on the side of I-75 North, north of the Norwood Lateral?

Just off the ramp from the Norwood Lateral to I-75 North, contractors have been clearing trees and other vegetation in preparation for the next three phases of the Mill Creek Expressway projects. These three phases include the pump station installation, railroad bridge replacements and the interstate widening between Regina Graeter Way and Ohio 126/Galbraith Road.

This isn't the only area where clearing has been done, as crews have been clearing at other locations within this section of the interstate between the Norwood Lateral and Ohio 126 since 2023.

Heading north of the Lateral is the construction of a new pump station

Crews are also working on the eastern side of I-75 North from Paddock Road to Ohio 126 and Mill Creek to construct a new pump station. Using a series of pumps and valves, the pump station helps transport water in a pipe over the hill and to a wastewater facility.

Currently, ODOT is installing pipes under the existing roads to prepare for the excavation of the underground drainage system for the pump station. The new station is being constructed because ODOT plans to widen I-75, and the widening of the highway would affect the current pump station. Construction began in June 2024 and is expected to be completed in Dec. 2028.

Construction along I-75 South near Prosser Avenue is for railroad tracks and highway realignment

Crews are working on the land west of I-75 South near Prosser Avenue to prepare for the reconstruction of railroad tracks. The current tracks exist between bridges that ODOT is replacing to prepare for the widening of I-75. The bridgework is scheduled to be completed in the summer of 2027.

When will the widening of I-75 happen?

The next phase of the I-75 widening from Regina Graeter Way to Ohio 126/Galbraith Road will likely begin this summer, pending its sale in the spring, and the anticipated completion date for this phase is in 2027.

Three phases of the Mill Creek Expressway projects will be occurring on I-75 North, north of the Norwood Lateral. Projects include a pump station installation, railroad bridge replacements and the widening of an interstate.

COVID

whether everybody was going to be quitting their health care jobs," said Emma Wager, a senior policy analyst at health policy nonprofit KFF. "The data shows that that has not happened."

She said that may be because wages in health care have kept pace with inflation, increasing between 20% and 25% since 2020. Still, the recovery isn't universal. Hospitals and doctors' offices returned last year to pre-COVID employment levels, according to Wager and her team's analysis of data from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, but skilled nursing and elder care facilities remained below 2020 staffing levels.

"That does continue to be a big problem," Wager said.

Yet even in hospitals, where employment has recovered, the staff isn't the same as before the pandemic.

Kylee Ham, a nurse who's worked in the emergency department of the University of Cincinnati Medical Center for over six years, said new nursing school graduates and travel nurses, who are not based in the hospital, have filled out the ranks in the years since the pandemic.

President of UCMC's local chapter of Ohio's largest nurses' union, Ham said the staffing data also doesn't account for changes in work conditions since the pandemic. She said patients and families are more aggressive, possibly because of longer wait times in emergency rooms, making the jobs of nurses and doctors more difficult and even dangerous.

"There's not a shortage of nurses," Ham said. "There's a shortage of nurses willing to work under unsafe conditions."

More takeout food, fewer trips to restaurants

Outside of health care, few businesses were hit harder by COVID than restaurants. The pandemic not only shuttered restaurants nationwide, it led to massive worker shortages as chefs, cooks, waiters and dishwashers left for more stable employment.

A correction soon followed, with owners offering higher wages and more benefits to lure back employees. But that, along with higher food costs, led to higher prices on restaurant menus that continue to this day.

Another trend that appears here to stay is the popularity of third-party delivery services, such as UberEats and DoorDash. The use of third-party delivery services increased three-fold during and after the pandemic, said John Barker, president of the Ohio Restaurant and Hospitality Alliance.

While that trend means customers are still spending at restaurants, it comes at a cost for restaurant owners: Most third-party services charge commissions to restaurants of 20% to 30%.

"Delivery fees have skyrocketed for restaurants," Barker said. "It lowers their margins." But given that so many diners are choosing them, most restaurants owners now consider them a necessary evil."

"It is both essential and terrible at the same time," said Anthony Sitek, who owns several Cincinnati restaurants, including Crown Cantina, Losanti, Rosie's Italian and Five on Vine. He said services like DoorDash and UberEats cut into their bottom line significantly. While the steady business he receives from delivery orders helps Sitek with essential costs, including payroll, the money they generate pales compared to what he would make if people came into his restaurants like they did before the pandemic.

Other restaurant owners say they've reluctantly embraced delivery services, too, seeing it as a way to stay competitive, especially among younger diners who are more comfortable with having their food delivered and with paying more for it.

"After many years of fighting them away, we added DoorDash last March," said Mike Burke, owner of Zip's in Mount Lookout. "That added a giant increase to our carry outs. As much as I dislike them, they added a significant increase to our bottom line."

What annoys many restaurant owners, Barker said, is the loss of control over the experience customers have when they visit their restaurants. Some food just doesn't travel well, Sitek said. "Eating at a restaurant is so much better," he said. With delivery, you are getting an inferior product. French fries just don't taste the same if they've been sitting in a car for an hour."

'COVID affected the practice of faith seriously'

The Catholic priest monitors the annual data on Mass attendance in the Archdiocese of Cincinnati, and he can see for himself how many of his fellow Catholics attend the services he presides over every week at the Cathedral Basilica of St. Peter in Chains.

To put it simply: There aren't as many in the pews as there used to be. Before the COVID-19 pandemic, about 131,000 Catholics attended Mass every week in the archdiocese. Last year, about 113,000 did. "COVID affected the practice of faith seriously," said Schmidt, director of the Center for Parish Vitality. "We're slowly, I think, climbing out of that hole."

Schmidt is a man of faith, but there is evidence to support his belief. After a precipitous fall in 2020, at the height of the pandemic, Mass attendance has rallied a bit. Climbing by at least a few thousand every year since.

Yet it has not come all the way back. And this worries not just Catholic leaders, but those of other faiths who are experiencing a similar trend. Church attendance is better than during the pandemic, but it's not what it was before the pandemic.

"Fewer people are attending church. Fewer people are religious," said Melissa Deckman, CEO of the Public Religion Research Institute, a nonprofit group that studies faith in America. "Some people speculated after COVID that there might be a bounce back, but we really haven't seen that," she said.

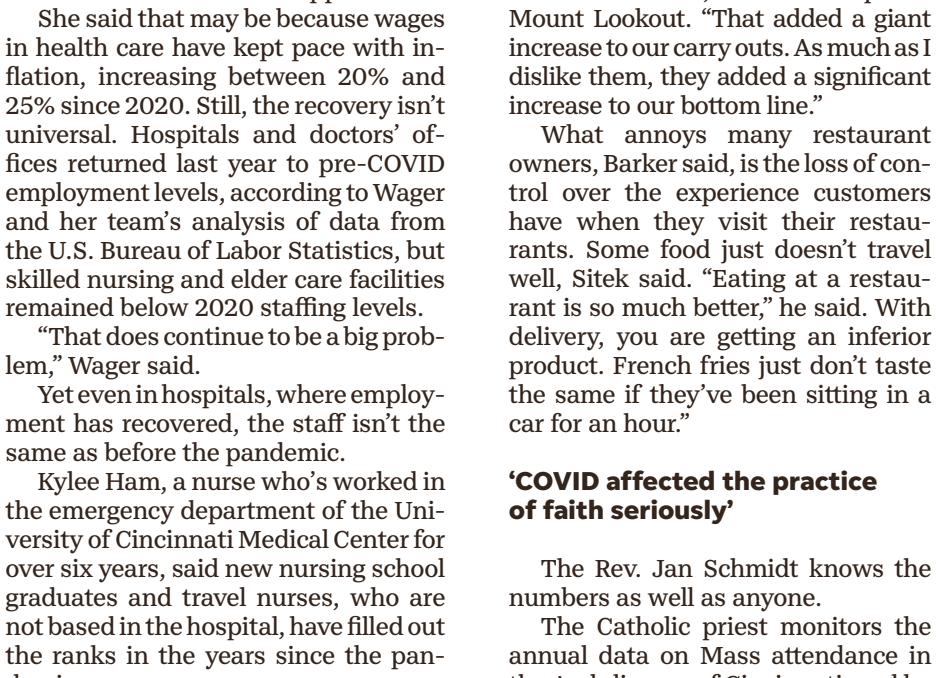

The big question is how much of the decline is related to COVID and how much already was happening. Churchgoing and church membership have been in decline generally for decades as Americans have drifted from organized religion.

In 2003, according to Gallup, 61% of Americans said religion was very important in their lives. In 2019, it was down to 49%. Today, it's about 45%.

To some, blame falls on disruptions like the clergy abuse scandal in the Catholic Church or divisive arguments over gay marriage, abortion or other politically charged issues in any number of faiths. To others, it's more about the secular world crowding out religious belief. Schmidt is optimistic. COVID may have given some a reason to walk away, he said, but the slow uptick in attendance after COVID is reason for hope. "In general, I think people are coming back," he said. "They need it. They need God."

Two Miami University students step up to save an instructor's life

Because they jumped in to perform CPR, he could have Christmas with his family

USA TODAY NETWORK

Two Miami University students had a finals week in December like no one else's.

The male faculty member, who the university said in a release wishes to not be named, emailed Stewart weeks later. He said that because of Stewart, his family got to have Christmas with him.

"After I read that in the email," Stewart, a junior from Loveland, Ohio, majoring in nursing said, "it hit me what I had done."

On Dec. 11, the instructor of Mathematical and Physical Sciences and his students were entering Mosler Hall at the university's Hamilton campus before an exam.

The teacher experienced a cardiac event and collapsed, a spokesperson for the university said. She could not provide information on what caused the collapse.

The students screamed for help and asked if anyone knew how to perform cardiopulmonary resuscitation, or CPR, according to Stewart.

"It was a very scary thing that day," said Osborne, a sophomore studying pre-nursing from Brookville, Indiana, "seeing my professor so blue in the face relying on his students to save his life."

He was working his part-time job in the mailroom and information center on the first floor of Mosler Hall.

He saw a student come into the building and grab the automated external defibrillator from the wall. He also heard another employee say there was a man down on the ground outside.

"Reed immediately popped up out of his chair and said he could help," said Stewart's supervisor, Connie Webb.

Stewart ran outside and assessed the situation. The instructor wasn't breathing and had no pulse. "I knew every second his brain wasn't getting oxygen, it would decrease his chances of survival," Stewart said.

He asked a student to call 911 and began performing CPR on the instructor to the rhythm of "Stayin' Alive" by the Bee Gees.

Osborne was leaving the gym when he saw the group of students and Stewart. He initially thought it was a test for the students. He didn't expect to see his instructor not breathing.

He asked Stewart if he wanted help. The two took turns doing compression, switching when the other got tired.

"This all happened so fast and my heart was pounding out of my chest," said Stewart.

After four or five minutes of CPR, Stewart began to hear the instructor's shallow, strained breathing.

Instructor has 'a long road to recovery' but 'mending nicely'

A four-person emergency medical services crew arrived and took over the situation, but both students remained worried about the instructor.

That night, Osborne tried calling every hospital in Hamilton to see if the instructor was there and stable. He couldn't find him, so he prayed and hoped for the best.

Tony Harris, union president of Hamilton Professional Firefighters Local 20, told Miami University he believes the students' CPR helped ensure a good outcome for the instructor, who survived.

In his email to Stewart, the instructor said he "only" spent five days in the intensive care unit.

"I have a long road to recovery," the email reads. The instructor added that his right knee is swollen and painful, but, other than that, he is "mending nicely" and will undergo cardiac rehabilitation.

Stewart called the experience the most indescribable yet fulfilling feeling he had ever felt.

Osborne feels similarly. He said the experience will be a "special moment in (his) heart" knowing he made an impact on the instructor's life.

XENIA

Ohio River Road Runners Club will host Xenia Marathon, Half Marathon, 10K on April 6

Hundreds of runners will hit the streets of Xenia in April as the Ohio River Road Runners Club hosts the annual Xenia Marathon, Half Marathon and 10K on 8 a.m. Sunday, April 6.

This will be the 58th running of the Xenia Marathon, one of the oldest and longest-running marathons in Ohio. The Ohio River Road Runners Club first staged the race in 1967, and later added a half marathon and 10K. The half marathon celebrates its 36th anniversary this year, and the 10K enters its third year as part of the Xenia event.

Registration is open through April 5 at RunXenia.com. Runners can also register in person on Saturday, April 5, at packet pickup; onsite registration is not available the day of the race. All three races start at the Xenia YMCA, 336 Progress Dr., in Xenia.

"This race has long been a tradition for the ORRRC, and we're proud to continue producing a high-level event for the Dayton running community," Xenia Marathon race director Kelsey Snively said. "We remain committed to delivering a quality race experience at an affordable price for all our participants."

The Xenia Marathon is a certified Boston Marathon qualifying race, and the flat, fast course provides the ideal conditions for runners to achieve a qualifying time. The early April date also positions the Xenia races as popular training runs for other major spring races, like the Flying Pig. This year, the marathon was selected as the Road Runners Club of America's state championship event for the 26.2-mile distance.

From the Xenia YMCA, runners will travel through downtown before the marathon and half marathon course splits from the 10K at the Greene County Courthouse. All courses feature a mix of local neighborhood roads and the scenic rail-to-trail bike path before winding back to the finish line at the Xenia YMCA.

Spectators can cheer runners anywhere on the course, with Shawnee Park and Xenia Station recommended as the best watch points. Marathon and half marathon participants might even see some friendly local emus along the way.

Other highlights include a live DJ at the start and finish line, booths from local businesses, and a free post-race meal for all runners and volunteers. Family and friends can join the post-race meal for a small fee. Prizes will be awarded to the top three overall male and female finishers in each race, and additional prizes will go to the top age group finishers.

The Xenia Marathon, Half Marathon and 10K are 100% volunteer-run events, with more than 100 Ohio River Road Runners Club members contributing their time to pre-event and race-day operations.

"This event can only happen thanks to the generous support of local businesses, the city of Xenia, local law enforcement and the Xenia YMCA," Snively said. "We want to give a big shoutout also to all our volunteers, including local HAM radio operators, track clubs and the ORRRC family for all the years they've helped make this race a success."

St. Margaret of York dedicates new school entrance during Catholic Schools Week

On Jan. 29, St. Margaret of York Parish celebrated the dedication of its new school entrance during Catholic Schools Week. Father Ed Smith presided over the dedication and blessing.

The spacious new entryway features an icon of the school's namesake, St. Margaret Clitherow. Known as the Pearl of York, Clitherow was martyred in 1586 for harboring priests and hearing Mass during the Reformation. She is a model of charity and kindness even in the face of harsh persecution.

Construction on the new entryway began in May 2024 and was completed by the end of December. The new entrance provides a new office area for staff, an expanded lobby and a safer point of entry for students and families. The school kitchen was also renovated.

"Our new entrance is a dream years in the making. We are so appreciative of our supportive community who continue to place the safety and security of our students and staff at the forefront," Principal Kristin Penley said.

St. Margaret of York School serves 622 students from kindergarten through grade eight. The school was awarded the National Blue Ribbon in 2013 and 2023. Learn more at www.smoyschool.org.

City of Loveland awarded funding for Nisbet Park

As part of the ongoing revitalization of Nisbet Park, the City of Loveland has been awarded a grant to add a new section of walking trail and to install swings.

The city received a $50,642 grant from the Ohio Department of Natural Resources' NatureWorks Program to go toward the estimated $67,650 installation.

These mini projects will continue the implementation of the Nisbet Park Master Plan, a guide drafted in 2021. The new walking path will be in the rear of the park near Karl Brown Way, connecting the existing path around the playground to the large shelter house. Swing benches, similar to a porch-style swing, will be installed along the path to showcase views of the Little Miami River. Construction is anticipated to begin this year.

"We are excited to add this one-of-a-kind seating area to Nisbet Park. This grant allows us to keep moving forward to accomplish everything in the park plan," said Chris Wojnicz, assistant city manager.

Park improvements began in 2023 with installation of a 24-foot (in diameter) gazebo, the first sections of walking path, and the first outdoor dining area. In 2024, the city added more seating areas, pathways and landscaping. Future plans include improving river access and constructing a new amphitheater, for which city staff is applying for funding.

Nisbet Park runs through the heart of Historic Downtown Loveland and is located just off the Little Miami Scenic Trail. According to a 2022 study by the Friends of the Little Miami State Park, the stretch of the trail where Nisbet Park is located averages 124,000 trail users a year – not to mention regular park visitors.

"Real sicko confirmed," soccer writer Ben Wright said on X.

Wright piggybacked a tweet by the Hollywood Reporter, which said, "#TimotheeChalamet hits Berlin. The young star arrives to a jam-packed press conference in a black and yellow striped outfit to talk the German premiere of his Oscar-nominated #ACompleteUnknown."

It's a terrific thrift-store find, on par with digging out a Dean Evason Hartford Whalers sweater from the 1980s.

Morgan Hughes, who was a spokesman for the Save The Crew movement, which helped prevent then-Crew owner Anthony Precourt from moving the team to Austin seven years ago, was solicited for comment on the breaking Chalamet Crew news.

Westfield leaders narrowly approved plans for the extension of a 55+ housing community on the site of an old tree farm on the city's west side – despite initial concerns about tree preservation and development density.

Hundreds of residents weighed in on the Claiborne Farms neighborhood proposal since it was first introduced at city council in August. The development, located east of the Shelborne Road and West 151st Street intersection, was approved by a vote of 4-3 at the Feb. 10 meeting.

With the approval, 150 new single-family homes will be built on the site of an old tree farm, as an extension of the Kimblewick community. The hundreds of trees on the property were not currently being harvested and neighbors appreciated what had became a forest area.

Ohio bill would give students free meals

Donovan Hunt
Enquirer Statehouse Bureau
USA TODAY NETWORK

A bipartisan bill in the Ohio Senate would give free meals to K-12 students in public and non-public chartered schools.

Sen. Bill Blessing, R-Colerain Twp, said funding school meals would:

- Improve truancy rates because students would be more likely to attend if they get a free meal.
- Improve student attention because less would be hungry during class.
- Eliminate stigmas surrounding students who currently get free meals.
- Give significant financial relief to families.

"If we're serious about supporting families in this state, this is a no-brainer," he said.

This is the second time Blessing and Sen. Kent Smith, D-Euclid, have sponsored legislation together that would give students free meals.

Blessing said the ultimate goal of SB 109 is to add this funding to the state's two-year budget, which must be finalized by June 30.

The budget is currently being discussed in the House, and Blessing said he wants to add this funding to it once it reaches the Senate.

Meals would be paid for by reimbursements from the Department of Education and Workforce in this bill. It lists a $300 million appropriation from the general revenue fund to pay for those.

Polling in May 2024 conducted by The Tarrance Group found that about two-thirds of Ohioans support universal free school meal programs. One in five students are food insecure in Ohio – over 400,000 children – according to groups like Solving Hunger Ohio and the Children's Hunger Alliance.

Cynthia Rees, state director of Council for a Strong America Ohio, said the average savings for a family of four would be between $1,000 and $1,200 per child.

Blessing said he has heard feedback from constituents worried their property taxes would rise from offering free meals, but that is not how he intends to fund the program.

Instead, Blessing said there are ample ways to fund this program including reforms to the business income tax deductions, which was a proposal from the last bill he and Smith introduced for free school meals. This funding is small in the scheme of state budgets that have risen above $100 billion, he said.

Other struggles to fund this program could come if a large tax decrease is included in the budget, which Blessing said there is an appetite for among lawmakers. He pointed to SB 3, a proposal that would phase down non-business income taxes to 2.75% over the next two years while decreasing state revenue significantly, as an example.

COVID-era free lunch

Federal relief funds during the COVID-19 pandemic allowed states to fund free meal programs. Free lunch ended during the 2022-2023 school year and Gov. Mike DeWine previously questioned if Ohio tax dollars should continue this policy.

Eight states – California, New Mexico, Nevada, Colorado, Minnesota, Michigan, Vermont, Massachusetts and Maine – have used their own funds to pay for permanent free universal school lunches once COVID money dried up. Arkansas Gov. Sarah Huckabee Sanders, a Republican, signed a bill on Feb. 20 giving students free school breakfast, which passed through both Arkansas chambers with strong bipartisan support.

Thomas Schatz, president of Citizens Against Government Waste, said the Ohio Legislature's job will be to balance any benefits from free universal meals with its cost. Any increase in business taxes for these programs seems unusual for a fiscally conservative state, he said.

"It's a question of resources. It's a question of priorities," he said. "In 2023, half of the public school students already qualify for free or reduced-price school meals, so I think it's a question of what the state can afford."

State patrol officers use 'a game' to train dogs to find explosives

Nathan Hart

USA TODAY NETWORK

Kova, a 3-year-old Labrador Retriever, doesn't get paid for her job detecting explosives for the Ohio State Highway Patrol.

Instead, she sits when she detects one of the 30 scents she's trained to find. Then, she gets a toy.

"The entire process for them, when we train our dogs on narcotics, or we train them on explosives, they don't know what they're smelling," Kova's handler, trooper Kurt Hedges, said. "They just know that when they find that odor, that is what gets them their toy. So, it's all a game."

Hedges said Kova is one of the first Labradors the patrol has used in 25 years. German Shepherds, Belgian Malinois and German Shorthaired Pointers are much more common dogs.

The Highway Patrol looks for a few characteristics when choosing dogs to become working dogs. They have to have a good sense of smell, high motivation to hunt and retrieve, and they have to be trainable.

Once the patrol has chosen a dog (often from out-of-state and overseas vendors), it's time for training. The pups are presented with a wall with three holes, one of which contains a smell they will need to be able to find in the future.

Once they find the source of the scent, the handler gets the dog to sit and then rewards it with a toy.

This process is repeated for each of the many explosive scents the K9s need to be able to detect. Trainers mix up the length and conditions of the exercises to ensure the dogs will stay on task in a variety of situations.

Once the dog has learned to find the eight odors required to be certified by the state, they move on to learning about 22 other scents.

At the end of the process, the highway patrol has a dog that can quickly find explosives.

To demonstrate, Hedges hid a small bundle of smokeless powder in one of the dorm rooms at the OSHP training facility. After sniffing excitedly up and down the hallway, Kova correctly identified the room the powder was in and sat in front of it.

She was rewarded with her toy, taking off running up and down the hallways with it in her mouth.

When it was time for more work, Hedges opened the door to the dorm room and let her find where exactly in the room the powder was. In less than a minute, she had found the cabinet containing the powder and sat in front of it.

She was again rewarded with her toy, spending the next few minutes chewing and playing with it.

"She loves (her toy), and that's what it takes. You have to have, it has to be a game to them that they love doing and never gets old," Hedges said.

Sometimes, even the runs are not enough to tire out the energetic dog.

"I keep waiting for the puppy-ness to kind of slow up a little bit," Hedges said.

Ohio Republican lawmaker wants to make school board races partisan

Ohio voters could start seeing an R or D next to the names of school board candidates on the ballot.

Senate Bill 107, introduced by Sen. Andrew Brenner, R-Delaware, would allow contenders for state and local school boards to declare their political party in general elections. It's not a firm requirement: Those who don't want to identify as a Republican or Democrat could request a nonpartisan or third-party label, or scrap the designation altogether.

Brenner said he wants to leave room for candidates who identify as independents. But he contends party labels provide more transparency for voters.

"I think people need to know who they're voting for and their backgrounds," Brenner told the statehouse bureau. "We have a lot of political activism going on in our local school boards."

School boards set budgets, hire superintendents and develop policies for their districts – routine activities that have become intensely political.

Frustrated parents flocked to meetings during the COVID-19 pandemic to air grievances about mask mandates and at-home learning. Others began advocating for book bans and claimed school officials were improperly teaching race and gender concepts.

Brenner's proposal also comes after Republicans stripped powers from the state Board of Education and created the Department of Education and Workforce in the governor's office. Backers of the change argued the board spent too much time on ideological fights, such as whether to support federal protections for LGBTQ students.

This isn't the first time Ohio Republicans have advocated for party labels in school board races. The practice is rare but not unheard of: Nine states allow partisan school board candidates, according to the Missouri-based MOST Policy Initiative. By contrast, Florida voters recently rejected a constitutional amendment to make school board elections partisan, the Tallahassee Democrat reported.

Brenner contends party labels provide more transparency for voters.

At this point, Brenner's bill focuses on general elections and wouldn't require Republican or Democratic candidates to run in primaries. He said that could change as lawmakers debate the legislation.

A spokesperson for the Ohio School Board Association did not respond to a request for comment. The group opposed a similar bill in 2023, saying it would limit the candidate pool.

"School board is front line," said Stephanie Hightower, a former Columbus school board member and president of the Columbus Urban League, who's recruiting candidates for the upcoming election. "You already have a limited amount of people who want to get in the fray just because of the politics that go into being a school board member."

Lucas Aulbach
Louisville Courier Journal
USA TODAY NETWORK

The race among Kentucky Republicans to replace Sen. Mitch McConnell in the nation's Capitol got heated in a hurry.

Minutes after McConnell, a U.S. Senate institution in office since 1985, announced he plans to retire at the end of his current term, former Kentucky Attorney General Daniel Cameron said he's entering the race. Within days, Cameron and two likely rivals in the run to take the seat had kick-started a war of words over an election more than 20 months away.

Western Kentucky University politics professor Jeffrey Budziak is "a little surprised that it got this heated this quickly." But potential candidates have good reason to move fast to stake their place in the race, he said.

"Senate seats don't come around very often," Budziak said. "They're going to try to make out their lane."

Barr, Cameron and Morris trade barbs

Cameron, the first Black attorney general in Kentucky's history who ran for governor in 2023 with then-former President Donald Trump's endorsement, may be the only high-profile Republican candidate in the race for Senate now – but he likely won't be alone long.

Morris

U.S. Rep. Andy Barr and businessman Nate Morris, both from Lexington, are both widely expected to challenge him, though neither have made an official announcement.

Cameron didn't enter the race with any shots at his potential rivals. But the one-time University of Louisville football player soon found himself playing defense. Hours after his announcement, a spokesperson for Barr issued a statement saying Cameron "embarrassed the President and our party by losing in a state that President Trump won by over 30 points – including losing Andy Barr's district by 19 points."

Barr

Around that same time, Morris published a video on social media he filmed at the conservative CPAC gathering, ripping both Barr and Cameron by name and tying them to McConnell.

"The candidates that are looking at this race, Andy Barr and Daniel Cameron, have refused to call out Mitch McConnell for the sabotage of President Trump's agenda," Morris said. "We cannot have a Mitch McConnell puppet filling his seat. This is a seat that belongs to the people, and we need to send someone to Washington who's going to fight with President Trump."

Cameron has deep ties to McConnell, whose popularity among Republicans has tanked amid a yearslong feud with Trump. A former member of the University of Louisville's McConnell Scholars Program, open to Kentucky high school seniors with "a strong demonstrated record of leadership, scholarship, and service," Cameron once served as the senator's legal counsel and praised McConnell a year ago as a lawmaker who's "left an indelible impact on our Nation and our Commonwealth."

Cameron, whose campaign did not respond to a request for comment Monday, hit back last week in response to the criticism. A campaign strategist told Fox News that Cameron has a significant lead over Barr in statewide polling and implied lobbyists have too much influence over the congressman, who's been in office for a dozen years.

He has not publicly addressed comments by Morris – who called Cameron a "Manchurian Candidate" for McConnell in a separate social media post Monday morning – but posted his own video distancing himself from some of McConnell's recent votes against Trump's cabinet picks.

"What we saw from Mitch McConnell in voting against Pete Hegseth, Tulsi Gabbard and (Robert F. Kennedy Jr.) was just flat-out wrong," Cameron said Monday. "You should expect a senator from Kentucky to vote for those nominees to advance the America First agenda. If I was in the Senate, I would have voted for those nominees because I recognize it reflects your values and it supports that agenda."

"There's a lot of pent-up energy to run for U.S. Senate in Kentucky. There haven't been that many opportunities. I look forward to it being quite a spectacle."

David Osborne, Kentucky House speaker

What comes next

The Republican primary for the 2026 race is more than a year away. We've got a long way to go, and more candidates could enter the race. U.S. Rep. James Comer has said he isn't planning to run, but fellow U.S. Rep. Thomas Massie hasn't ruled it out, with a social media poll last week asking his followers what they think he should do.

Kentucky House Speaker David Osborne, R-Prospect, was quick to praise McConnell last week as "one of the most consequential political figures, really, of our country's history." But the quick start to campaign season that began minutes after McConnell announced his pending retirement showed a "very spirited and competitive primary" is coming.

"There's a lot of pent-up energy to run for U.S. Senate in Kentucky. There haven't been that many opportunities," Osborne said. "I look forward to it being quite a spectacle."

The spectacle so far, Budziak said, has shown other potential Republican candidates probably think Cameron is the one to beat at this stage.

"When you're coming out swinging that heavy at somebody, it's pretty clear that this person's got to get knocked down quite a bit," Budziak said.

In the 2023 gubernatorial race, Trump gave Cameron a critical endorsement 11 months before the primary in May – and those considering a run for Senate may feel they don't have time to waste.

"(Trump) went to Cameron immediately and that really, I think, set the tenor for that race," Budziak said. "I would assume part of the reason to why we're getting so nasty so early is I wonder if these guys have a sense that he might do that again."

While Trump's endorsement hangs over the race, McConnell's presence does as well.

People who have followed Cameron's career closely likely know of his ties to the senator, Budziak said, but the average Kentucky voter may not know "the kind of backroom history of how Daniel Cameron came to be." GOP candidates running against Cameron probably hope McConnell endorses his former protégé, he said.

Morris, positioning himself as a political outsider who supports Trump and wants change in Kentucky, has worked to tie both Barr and Cameron to McConnell, while Barr has gone out of his way to play up his loyalty to the president. His campaign statement last week referred to Trump as "the greatest President we've ever seen" and called Cameron a "failed candidate," language Budziak said was clearly aimed at getting Trump's attention.

"I would assume we're going to see these shades of trying to say, 'Who's the MAGA-est person?' " throughout the campaign, the professor said. "... And I think McConnell may end up being a real foil for that."

Measles case confirmed in Kentucky amid outbreak in multiple states

Quinlan Bentley
USA TODAY NETWORK

Public health officials have confirmed a case of measles in Kentucky amid ongoing outbreaks in multiple states.

The Kentucky Cabinet for Health and Family Services said a Frankfort resident recently traveled internationally to an area with an ongoing measles outbreak and returned home while still infectious, even visiting a Planet Fitness location.

In a news release, officials said they are working to identify and contact anyone who may have been exposed to the virus. The last confirmed case of measles in Kentucky was in 2023.

Measles – a highly contagious respiratory virus known to cause serious health complications in young children – is an airborne illness that can survive up to two hours after an infected person leaves an area, officials said.

Early symptoms typically begin eight to 12 days after exposure and include high fever, cough, runny nose and watery eyes.

"Measles is one of the most contagious viruses in the world," Kentucky Department for Public Health Commissioner Dr. Steven Stack said in a release. "Fortunately, measles can be prevented with the measles, mumps and rubella (MMR) vaccine, which is safe and effective. Vaccines are an essential tool to keep children and adults safe and healthy."

Kentucky isn't the first state to have a case of measles this year. More than 100 people were infected in a fast-growing measles outbreak in Texas and New Mexico, USA TODAY reported, including a child who succumbed to the virus in the first measles death in the U.S. since 2015.

Officials say anyone exposed to the virus but who has not been vaccinated should quarantine for 12 days after exposure and immediately contact a doctor once symptoms develop.

"If you have been exposed to measles (and) are going to see a health care practitioner, it is important to call the facility to make them aware of your measles exposure and symptoms prior to entering so that others are not exposed," Stack said.

More information about measles can be found at the Kentucky Department for Public Health's website or the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's website.

Trump planning audit of gold reserves at Fort Knox

Marina Johnson
Louisville Courier Journal
USA TODAY NETWORK

President Donald Trump is planning for his administration to visit to the commonwealth to audit U.S. gold reserves in Fort Knox.

While traveling on Air Force One last month, Trump said his administration will audit the military base "to make sure the gold is there."

"We hope everything's fine with Fort Knox but we're going to go to Fort Knox – the fabled Fort Knox – to make sure the gold is there," Trump said. "If the gold isn't there, we're going to be very upset."

U.S. Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent says there aren't any plans to visit Kentucky and an annual audit reveals all of the gold supply remains at the base.

"There was a report Sept. 30, 2024," he said in an interview with Bloomberg Television. "All the gold is there. Any U.S. senator who wants to come and visit it can arrange a visit through our office."

Trump's comments follow pressure from Elon Musk, adviser for the Department of Government Efficiency, on X, formerly Twitter, where he criticized a lack of an annual audit determining the amount of gold at the base.

Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul confirmed in a response on X that the base isn't audited regularly and USA TODAY reports the last audit at the Fort Knox reserve was in September 1974, when several Congressional representatives assured the American public that the supply remained intact, according to the U.S. Mint.

Fort Knox, which spans 108,955 acres across Hardin, Meade and Bullitt counties and is located about 40 miles south of Louisville, is recognized for holding more than 147 million ounces of the U.S.' gold reserves, more than any other base.

The U.S. owns 8,133.46 metric tons of gold, according to the World Gold Council, which is more than any other nation and twice that of Germany's, which sits at 3,351.53 metric tons.

The base has previously also stored several historic rarities, from the Declaration of Independence and the U.S. Constitution to Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg address.

It was last toured in 2017 during the first Trump administration where Kentucky U.S. Sen. Mitch McConnell, then-Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin and a few Congressional representatives entered the base in the first visit to nonauthorized personnel in more than 40 years.

STATE NEWS

Tariffs: Where do local lawmakers stand

Scott Wartman
USA TODAY NETWORK

Having trouble keeping up with the news coming from the White House? You're not alone. In the first month in office, President Donald Trump has signed 68 executive orders. Tech mogul Elon Musk has become a regular visitor to the Oval Office with viral press events. The administration's actions have sparked protests across the country, including Cincinnati.

Given the rapid amount of news, The Enquirer is asking members of Congress about some of the top issues coming from the White House. This week's question involves tariffs.

Have a question you would like to ask the area members of Congress? You can submit your questions here. Your question, name and where you are from could be published.

Only two members of the eight who represent Greater Cincinnati responded: Republican Sen. Rand Paul of Kentuky and Democratic Rep. Greg Landsman of Cincinnati.

Reps. David Taylor, Warren Davidson and Thomas Massie and Sens. Bernie Moreno, Jon Husted and Mitch McConnell did not respond.

For those who did not respond to the questions, The Enquirer has compiled the Congress member's statements in previous media appearances or on social media.

Do you agree with President Trump's proposed tariffs? Why or why not?

Landsman

Rep. Greg Landsman
Landsman, a Democrat from Cincinnati's Mount Washington neighborhood, in an email to The Enquirer, said sweeping tariffs that Trump has proposed will lead to higher prices and trade wars.

Landsman said he sees some value in tariffs targeted for a specific purpose to help companies and workers. In his email, Landsman suggested Trump could work on other issues.

"Why doesn't the president work with Congress to secure a durable fix to the border and the fentanyl crisis?" Landsman said. "It's harder and would require real strength, but it's the only way to get anything meaningful done."

Paul

Sen. Rand Paul
Paul, a Republican from Bowling Green, Ky., said tariffs are a bad idea. In an interview with The Enquirer, Paul said tariffs could hit Kentucky's bourbon industry, which relies on sales to foreign countries that might retaliate and levy a high tariff on U.S. exports.

He said a 2018 retaliatory tariff on soybeans levied by China hurt Kentucky farmers.

"Tariffs are simply a tax on trade," Paul said. "When you tax trade, you make it more expensive and so consumers will pay higher prices."

Davidson

Rep. Warren Davidson
Davidson, a Republican from Troy who represents western Hamilton County and Butler County, on Feb. 13 told CNN's Brianna Keilar he couldn't guarantee tariffs wouldn't raise prices on consumers.

"But I know that's not the intent, and I believe that the policies have a better chance to work than (to) ... ignore what China's doing and keep trading with them. That hasn't worked. So why wouldn't we try something different?"

Taylor

Rep. David Taylor
No comments from Taylor regarding tariffs could be found. Taylor is a newly elected Republican congressman representing Clermont County and the 2nd Congressional District.

Massie

Rep. Thomas Massie
Massie in the past has spoken favorably of tariffs, particularly replacing the income tax revenue with tariffs. When Trump floated the idea of getting rid of the income tax in favor of tariffs as the government's primary source of revenue, Massie told the news site Semafor he would support it.

"For the majority of our country's history, this government was founded with tariffs," Massie told Semafor. "I would be OK with using tariffs instead of the income tax ... The broader, the better, because that way you don't have government picking winners and losers."

Moreno

Sen. Bernie Moreno
Moreno, a Republican from Cleveland, applauded when Trump on Feb. 1 imposed 25% tariffs on Mexico and Canada, which were later rescinded.

"I fully support President Trump's move to impose tariffs on Mexico and Canada," Moreno said in a post on X.

"Both countries have failed to protect America from drug trafficking and illegal migration. Ohio is open for business and will roll out the red carpet for any company manufacturing in America!"

Husted

Sen. Jon Husted
No comments could be found on Husted's position on tariffs. Husted is a Columbus-area Republican and former lieutenant governor who was appointed in January to Vice President JD Vance's former senate seat.

Sen. Mitch McConnell

McConnell

McConnell, in an editorial published Feb. 12 by the Louisville Courier-Journal, opposed Trump's tariffs.

"No matter our best intentions, tariffs are bad policy," the Republican senator from Louisville wrote in the editorial.

Tariffs raise prices for American businesses and consumers and heighten tensions abroad, making it more difficult to work with allies, McConnell wrote.

"Trade wars with our partners hurt working people most," McConnell wrote. "And the president has better tools to protect American workers without forcing our families and businesses to absorb higher costs."

The easiest route to a great lawn this spring

Chris McKeown
Guest columnist

One of the first things people like to check off their "to-do" list in the spring is plant grass seed. This is understandable because, at the end of winter, the bare areas in the lawn are very apparent.

This spring, the need to seed for some has most likely increased. This is because the best season to seed – the fall – was missed last year because of an extended drought.

Here are some questions you might be asking yourself and what I recommend you know before planting grass seed.

When should I plant my grass seed?

When you should plant your grass seed depends on the current weather. There is a process known as "dormant seeding" or "winter seeding." This needs to be done when we are having weather where the temperature drops below freezing at night and then rises above freezing during the day.

If you plant your grass seed when this is happening, the soil loosens itself for the seed to get into the soil. This is the easiest way to plant grass seed. During other times of the year, you have to physically loosen the soil to prepare it for the seed. With our normal weather patterns, you still have time to do this. Keep in mind that when you do this you shouldn't expect to see the seed growing until mid to late April.

If you miss the opportunity to do this, you can seed anytime but you will need to physically loosen the soil. You should try to get this done before the soil starts warming in mid-April. Make sure your seed is planted and ready to grow when the soil warms.

What grass seed should I use?

The best grasses for our soil and weather are varieties of Turf Type Tall Fescue. These fescues are drought-tolerant, disease-resistant and create thick, lush lawns. They need the soil temperature to be between 50-65 degrees to start germinating. The soil will not reach these temperatures until the air temperatures are between 68- 77 degrees. We normally do not start to consistently experience these temperatures until the later weeks of April.

Should I apply pre-emergent weed control?

With the planting of grass seed in the spring, many lawn lovers get confused and conflicted about how seeding works with applying pre-emergent weed control. This is because you cannot plant grass seed and use these products. These products work by stopping the germination of seeds. They cannot tell the difference between good grass seeds and bad weed seeds.

In this situation, you have choices. The first is simple: prioritize what is more important. If weed prevention is your priority, postpone the seeding until fall. This is not a bad option because fall is the best time of the year to seed.

If seeding is your priority, you can forego the pre-emergent herbicides. Then you can use post-emergent herbicides to control the weeds. The downside here is some weeds are difficult to kill this way.

So, can I plant seeds and use weed control?

There is a compromise available. The fescue seed will germinate at a lower soil temperature than the crabgrass. This will open up a window of time later when you can apply the weed prevention ahead of the crabgrass. Wait until the grass seed germinates and starts to grow. Then allow it to grow to an inch or more. Then you can apply the weed prevention.

This is not a perfect solution because the timing is tight. One thing that works to your advantage is crabgrass plants germinate slowly, not all at once. Some of it might pop up early but not all. If it does you can kill what you miss easily with a post-emergent spray.

You may also gain an advantage putting the pre-emergent down later. The timing is better. Many of you will put it down in March. This is too early.

Some of these products only work for 6 weeks. If you get them down too early, they might not be effective when you want them. Applying them later will keep you from missing the germination of the weeds.

'My Dead Friend ZOE' USES DARK HUMOR TO TACKLE PTSD

Bill Goodykoontz Arizona Republic | USA TODAY NETWORK

Post-traumatic stress disorder and suicide among veterans don't sound like the kind of subjects that would make for a really effective dark comedy.

And yet in "My Dead Friend Zoe" they do just that. It's funny, it's moving and the laughs do nothing to take away from the serious and important message that inspires the film.

Writer and director Kyle Hausmann-Stokes based the film on his own experiences as a veteran, and on the lives and deaths of some of the people who served with him. It's the kind of thing that only someone who had been in these situations could really express. The film could have gone wrong in about 10 different ways. But thanks to Haussmann-Stokes' direction and the outstanding performances, it succeeds.

Merit (Sonequa Martin-Green, brilliant) is done with a tour in Afghanistan and is back home. She struggles with the loss of her friend and fellow soldier, the Zoe of the title (Natalie Morales). Actually, she also struggles with her presence – Zoe has a habit of showing up in Merit's life at inopportune times, offering questionable advice.

For instance, as part of a court order – she has some issues – Merit has to attend group-therapy sessions for veterans, led by Dr. Cole (Morgan Freeman). The whole point of the exercise is to share, to talk about what is going on with your life, about the trauma that brought you there in the first place.

Only Zoe won't let Merit do that. No one else can see her, of course, but to Merit Zoe couldn't be more real, and she constantly warns her not to share her story, or she'll lose Zoe forever. It's a guilt trip of the first order. It's also effective.

In the meantime Merit remembers her tour with Zoe, their friendship, their arguments, their vastly different backgrounds that could threaten to drive them apart or, sometimes, bring them together. They had a lot of fun in the least likely of places to have it, but also experienced real terror.

Cole isn't happy with Merit's attitude or her lack of participation. He's unhappier still when she stops showing up, but she has a good reason: Her mother Kris (Gloria Reuben) dispatches Merit to the lake house of Merit's grandfather Dale (Ed Harris). He's a retired lieutenant colonel and the reason Merit enlisted instead of going to college. Now he's struggling with his memory.

And Merit is struggling with Zoe, who keeps showing up. She's not an entirely unwelcome presence – she was Zoe's best friend after all – but it's becoming clear to Zoe that she is an impediment to her moving forward. It's not just awkward. It's unhealthy. (Morales, for her part, sells the annoyance aspect of her character with ease – maybe a little too well at first – but is also effective at the more complicated parts.)

Kris wants to put Dale in an assisted living facility, unbeknownst to him. That's where she meets Alex (Utkarsh Ambudkar), whose family owns the place. They tentatively circle each other, meeting at a bar for a drink. Guess who interferes?

The scenes between Martin-Green and Harris are magnetic, a clinic in tone and delivery, of modulating a character through emotional changes. Obviously they love each other and respect each other's service, but both are fragile.

This may sound maudlin, but it's not. And again, a lot of it is funny. The authenticity is a big selling point (be sure to watch the end credits). Hausmann-Stokes won't let the film get sappy; Martin-Green and Harris ensure it. Instead, it's an unflinching look at a health crisis, a film that arrives at what it's trying to say through unconventional means, and is all the more effective for it.

THE AMISH COOK

Gloria Yoder
Special to Cincinnati Enquirer | USA TODAY NETWORK

Last week's chat with you all got me on a roll with this whole organizing thing. January was the month I had set aside to go through anything and everything in the house or garage that needed organization.

The words of my elementary school teacher rung in my ears, "A place for everything, and everything in its place." I never was one who lived up to that statement, but as time went on, I saw that it really was the only way to flow as a family with six little ones.

Organizing ranks among the top of my hobbies, but you may not guess it when you walk into my house. You see, this is where we live; it's not a show piece or a model, it's the place the children and I call home. The best of memories and the hardest of times have been spent inside these four walls.

Some time ago when I decided it's the time to downsize on the quantity of items that are stacked and stored in our house, I found myself growing weary of constantly making decisions: "Should this vase be taken to a thrift shop or should it be given away with a bouquet, and if I do keep it for that perfect moment, will I reach the goal before the next time I clean out? Is this sweater Hosanna outgrew ready for the trash or would someone still get good use out of it? Will the boys mind if I trash the tractor with a missing wheel, or will they be heartbroken?"

Many times, when I was organizing there were little hands, helping me go through my already sorted items. It was time for something new. Anything that I did not actually need or really want in my house was to go into a tote, and when it was full, it would go to the garage. The next tote stood in line, they were filled and placed out of sight, and to the best of my efforts, out of mind.

In the meanwhile, the children were told that these totes are going to the garage, and we will decide later what we'll do with everything. I knew that one day the time would come where every item in every tote would be sorted and placed in its assigned spot. Funny how much I tend to dread a duty as such, and when the time is right, I end up enjoying it.

Well, guess what? January first came with all its ambitions of major organization, and with it came the flu bug, soaking up all my time for over a week.

"Must be God has something else in mind," I told myself.

When the moment finally came to start on cleaning out corners, I was elated. I tackled hard-to-get corners that have been neglected since Daniel had passed. The ones that bugged me the most also brought the most satisfaction.

It's mid-February and it's still not complete, but we'll make the best of it and keep on 'til we've reached our goal. I had hoped to set the month of February aside to get in touch with column readers and do some sewing for my growing children.

"Healthy" bars PROVIDED BY KEVIN WILLIAMS

We'll see how it goes. Seemingly the most important part is to learn to go with the flow even when things don't turn out the way I planned. I keep learning joy is not based on my circumstance, but on our Savior and my willingness to let go of what I wanted.

So, back to the project at hand. I now have 20 totes, and several barrels lined up in the garage, all sorted. Hosanna's favorite is, of course, the one marked "dolls," which contains extra dolls and toys that have been cluttering up her closet. One doll with a purse and some basic doll clothes seem to keep her happier than a basket full of them, then needing to put them all away every time she gets them out.

One of my favorites is a large, black tote marked "Austin." It is loaded with clothes for him to grow into that I have picked up in Amish thrift stores or others have passed on to me. Time and again, when he is in need of a pair of pants I scan the stacks, and many times I find what I need. If you are a mother who is sewing for your family, you know the blessing of little things as such.

There are a few totes that bring warmth mingled with sadness. Before each of our babies were born, I would get out the baby totes and sort through these adorable little clothes and dream about the newborn soon to be in my arms.

Before Daniel passed, I imagined of one day having a dozen children. Things changed. It was a blow at first, but as God heals, I have come to enjoy and embrace the stage of having the children growing older and establishing deeper relationships with them.

As I sort through clothes, I sort through seasons of life; I find there is nothing I am in charge of, except to allow God to be in charge of all things in my life.

I am getting carried away; it's time to be quiet and wind up with a recipe. I'd rather make up my own recipe for organization, but I know that's not happening. I just need to finish up my own projects.

One morning before I dove into more organizing, I decided to mix up a batch of scrumptious "healthy bars." The recipe was in a package sent to us from my uncle's family from Pennsylvania. The box was loaded with all kinds of goodies, including jars with the needed ingredients to make these bars.

The children were impressed to come home from school and satisfy their after-school cravings with this yummy treat. Try them for yourself. Since they are no-bake, they are easy to put together and always fun to share.

Scrumptious 'healthy' bars

Ingredients for bars

2 cups oatmeal

1 cup peanut butter

½ cup honey

⅔ cup chocolate chips (optional)

1 tablespoon chia seeds (optional)

Mix all together and press into a 9-by-9-inch container.

Ingredients for 'healthy chocolate'

½ cup coconut oil

½ cup cocoa powder

½ cup peanut butter

⅓ cup maple syrup

½ teaspoon salt

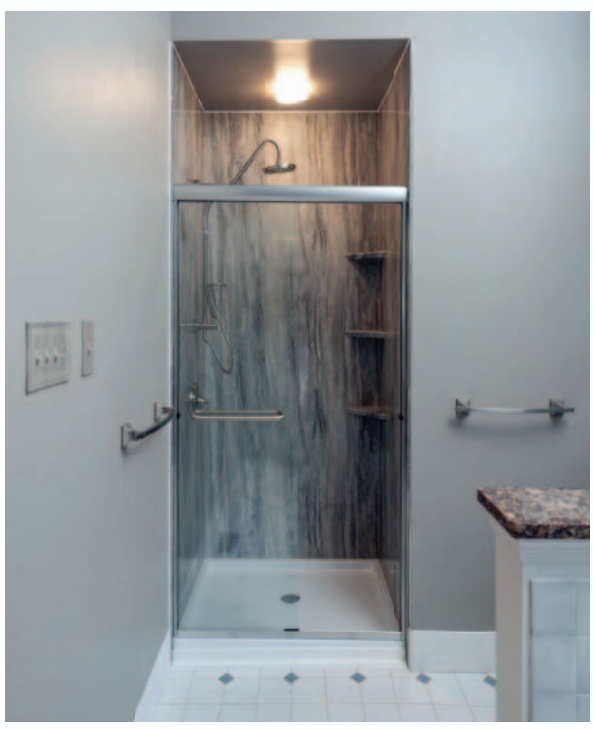

1 teaspoon vanilla

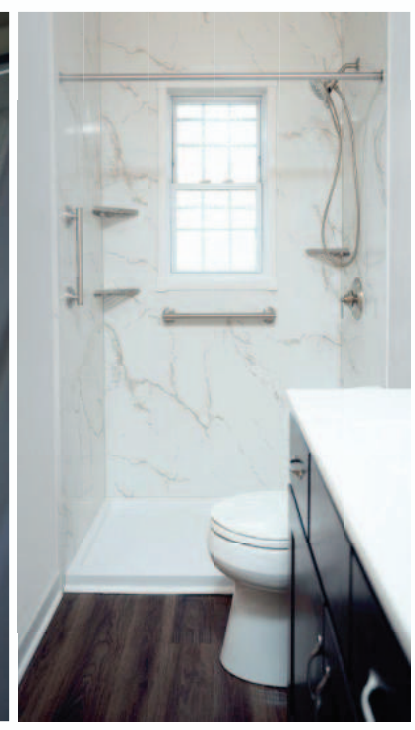

Instructions

1. Place coconut oil in a saucepan. Heat until melted.

2. Remove from heat and add remaining ingredients. Whisk together.

Cruise ships offer spaces for adults only

Nathan Diller
USA TODAY

Spring break is among the busiest times to cruise, but Randy Young managed to carve out a relaxing holiday on board Carnival Celebration last March.

The 42-year-old New Jersey resident spent sea days in Carnival Cruise Line ship's Serenity Adult-Only Retreat for guests 21 and up, which on Celebration has a dedicated pool, loungers and its own bar. Young largely stayed there from morning until mid-afternoon.

"(It was) just this whole different experience than you felt from the rest of the ship walking to that area," he told USA TODAY. "You went through all this chaos and kid soup in the main pool, and you walk to the back where it just feels so much more relaxed."

Cruises are increasingly popular vacation options, with 37.1 million ocean-going passengers expected to set sail this year, up from an estimated 34.7 in 2024, according to Cruise Lines International Association's most recent State of the Cruise Industry Report. CLIA said one-third of families cruise with at least two generations.

But adults-only spaces on cruise ships allow guests to curate a different kind of experience on otherwise family-friendly vessels. Here's what to know.

'E for Everyone'

Carnival Cruise Line has built its ships with wide appeal in mind. "Ultimately, it's about giving our guests more choice and freedom to tailor their cruise experience to their personal preferences," Glenn Aprile, the line's AVP of brand experience and product development, said in an email.

He pointed to Serenity, where guests can sun and enjoy the sea breeze. "It gives guests the feeling of stepping into their very own private oasis filled with comfortable loungers and hammocks, sweeping ocean views, pools and a dedicated cocktail bar," he added.

Passengers must be at least 18 to visit the Cloud 9 Spa, as well.

"It's all about creating spaces where our guests can experience a little bit of everything, depending on what they're looking for," Aprile said. "Adults can find their own pace and still have the option to dive into the Carnival fun when they'd like."

Royal Caribbean similarly strives "to keep the idea of being 'E for Everyone' in mind," Jay Schneider, chief product innovation officer at Royal Caribbean Group, said. That includes parents who want some time to themselves or guests traveling without kids.

The Solarium, for example, featured on many ships in its fleet, offers lounge space, whirlpools and more. Royal Caribbean takes pains to differentiate those spaces from others on board.

"Even looking at the fine details, our team puts extra thought into the appropriate aesthetics of these spaces, ensuring that the colors and decorations set the tone and feel distinct from our kid-friendly areas," Schneider said in an email.

Icon of the Seas launched last year as a haven for kids, from its multicolored Category 6 water park – billed as the biggest at sea – to a full-size carousel in view of massive flamingo and surfboard statues.

But its adults-only Hideaway area – one of eight neighborhoods on board – is more sedate. The space has a muted pink-and-blue color palette with an infinity pool at the vessel's aft and views of its wake.

"We really strive to set the tone right off the gate to help define the space and allow guests to enjoy it to its fullest extent," Schneider said.

Those features extend to their land-based offerings, too. Royal Caribbean opened the adults-only Hideaway Beach last year at its private Bahamas destination, Perfect Day at CocoCay, complete with a private beach and pools, cabanas and live music. Schneider said an adults-only area was the "number one requested addition" to the island, and has since become one of its top-rated experiences.

Carnival's Celebration Key, slated to open this July also in the Bahamas, will feature multiple areas of that kind. The destination's Pearl Cove Beach Club will be for visitors 18 and older, and there will be an adults-only space within Calypso Lagoon with a DJ and swim-up bar.

What other cruise lines have adults-only spaces?

- Norwegian Cruise Line: Norwegian's Vibe Beach Club and Spice H20 Lounge, available on select ships, are reserved for adult guests. Passengers also have to be at least 16 to use the sun deck in The Haven – the line's luxe ship-within-a-ship concept – and the fitness center.
- Disney Cruise Line: Disney ships all have an adult-only pool and cafe, at least one restaurant for guests over 18 – such as Palo Steakhouse and Enchanté by Chef Arnaud Lallement on its Wish class – and exclusive lounges. Most of the lounges are open to all guests during the day before adult programming begins at 9 p.m. Senses Spa and the fitness center are also reserved for guests 18 and up, along with the Serenity Bay area at its Disney Castaway Cay and Disney Lookout Cay at Lighthouse Point destinations in the Bahamas.
- MSC Cruises: MSC's adult-only spaces include a dedicated pool and surrounding deck areas on its World, Meraviglia, Seaside and Fantasia Class ships, and the Aurea Spa thermal areas. MSC World America, the line's new ship launching in April, will also feature the 18-and-up venue The Loft. The space will host comedy, dueling pianos and karaoke.

Do adults-only spaces cost extra?

Sometimes.

Entry to Carnival's Serenity is included in the fare, for example, while Norwegian's Vibe Beach Club costs between $149 and $329 per person for the duration of a sailing, depending on the ship and length of the cruise. Other spaces that come at an extra charge include Carnival's Pearl Cove Beach Club; Royal Caribbean's Hideaway Beach; MSC's Aurea Spa thermal areas (though they are included for MSC Yacht Club and Aurea Suite guests); and Disney's adult-only restaurants if guests forgo rotational dining.

How to take a kid-free cruise

Big, mainstream ships are typically geared towards families – including multigenerational groups – so avoiding kids entirely is tough. But in addition to adults-only onboard spaces, select programming may be 18+ or naturally lend itself to grown-ups, according to RacQuelle Major-Holland, owner of Major Adventures Travel Agency.

Those include late-night comedy shows, wine tastings or mixology classes. "There's always going to be plenty to do for adults," she said. "But obviously, on those cruise lines like Carnival and Royal Caribbean that attract more families, you're going to probably see the family activities highlighted more than the adults."

In Major-Holland's view, however, 18+ spaces on those ships are "limited." Cruising at times when kids are in school may mean fewer youngsters, but travelers looking for a child-free holiday may be better off booking with an adults-only company like Virgin Voyages.

Young, who is a marketing manager for a software company and runs a blog about cruises, enjoys the amenities on larger ships – but also wants to chill out.

"I don't have kids, so I like a little peace and quiet. But also, I love the ropes course on the (Carnival) Celebration," he said. "We ziplined over the side of the ship."

Other times, areas like Serenity gave him the escape he was looking for. "There were at least 1,000 kids on the ship, if not more, and it didn't feel like it because I purposely avoided where the kids were going to be because that's not what I want to do."

Hobby turns into Snoop Dogg-approved restaurant

Haadiza Ogwude Cincinnati Enquirer | USA TODAY NETWORK

When Dwan Ward moved to Cincinnati in 1995, he never envisioned he would open a barbecue joint. But as demand for his cooking grew, he decided to open Alabama Que, which is now a Short Vine staple. • "The only thing I wanted to do in life was be a professional firefighter or professional football player. I never wanted to do anything else," Ward, a former University of Cincinnati football player, said. "This food stuff was just doing some stuff on the side. I just kind of fell into it and took it and ran with it." • Ward, a native of Bellamy, Alabama, had recently left the U.S. Navy, where he served as a shipboard firefighter in the Persian Gulf War, when he decided to come to the Queen City. After receiving several Division I offers, he transferred from Solano Community College in California to UC due to the school's fire and safety engineering program. • During his stint at UC, Ward helped the Bearcats end their 47-year bowl game drought in 1997, when the team won the inaugural Humanitarian Bowl, now called the Famous Idaho Potato Bowl, against the Utah State Aggies. • So how did he end up in the culinary industry?

Alabama Que owner started cooking at Middletown's fire department

After earning his bachelor's degree in 1998, the Navy veteran finally began his firefighting career with the Middletown Division of Fire. Little did he know his biggest contribution to the fire station would be in the kitchen.

"When I started working in the fire department, they found I knew how to cook. So, instead of me washing trucks and waxing floors, just give me the keys to the Tahoe and I'll just go to the grocery store by myself, and buy the food, bring it back and cook it," he said.

Although cooking started as just a hobby, Ward's dishes quickly gained the attention of his fellow firefighters and their families, who often asked him to cater events on the side.

Ward decided to open his first brick-and-mortar location on the West Side in 2008 after finding success through his part-time catering business, which he opened in 2002.

Turkey tips with mac and cheese, greens, green beans, baked beans and yams by Alabama Que.

A viral TikTok sensation

By May 2012, Alabama Que moved to its current location on Short Vine and has since gained recognition for its "health-conscious" barbecue, per the restaurant's website.

Its signature smoked turkey tips have even attracted several celebrities, such as rappers Wale, Snoop Dogg and YG, and former Cincinnati Bengals wide receiver A.J. Green.

The restaurant has also become popular on TikTok, amassing over 133,000 followers on the short-form video app.

"Sometimes people might come here and just say, 'Man he got it going on. His stuff went viral.' But I'm not really trying to go viral," he said. "You got to do what the new generation do, or you're gonna fall on the wayside."

Alabama Que is a 'health-conscious' restaurant with southern roots

Ward learned how to cook while working in a restaurant in California, but his southern roots inspire the menu at Alabama Que.

The collard greens are a replica of his mother's recipe, which features a blend of smoked turkey and cabbage. The idea for his special 15-bean soup, for which a video has amassed over 6 million views on TikTok, came from the fire station. However, the process of preparing the dish stems from his childhood of plucking rocks and debris from the bean pot.

Regardless of the menu item, everything at Alabama Que is made fresh daily. From cutting 24 bunches of greens and 12 cabbages a day to peeling 80 pounds of yams, Ward said "when you make it fresh, you can't do too much wrong to mess it up."

"I'm not trying to do anybody else's recipe. I'm just doing what I grew up on," he said.

Alabama Que, located at 2733 Short Vine St., is open from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. Tuesday through Thursday and from 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. Fridays and Saturdays.

GOING UP

1,000-acre adventure park will be coming to NKY

Aaron Valdez
USA TODAY NETWORK

Real estate and recreational development in Greater Cincinnati is booming. The Enquirer's Going Up series is here to introduce you to need-to-know development projects around the region.

Want more information about developments near you? Email sfranklin@enquirer.com, cweiser@enquirer.com or tag @Enquirer with details.

The basics of Eons Adventure Park

Address: 647 Sycamore Tree Lane, Erlanger, Kentucky.

Eons Adventure Park provides locals and tourists a space for outdoor recreation

Eons Adventure Park will be a 1,000-acre urban woodland adventure park "designed for all generations to wander, ride, play, learn, escape and explore forever," according to a news release from the city of Erlanger. Once completed, the park will potentially span multiple Northern Kentucky cities, stretching from Cincinnati/Northern Kentucky International Airport to the Riverfront Commons in Ludlow.

The park will offer an abundance of recreational features, including:

- Mountain bike trails and hiking trails.
- A dog park, picnic shelters and playgrounds.
- Educational installations and overlooks.
- Public art on roadway underpasses.
- A coffee shop.
- A network of canopy trails that will take people through the area's many trees and bushes.

"As we were looking at the whole scope, we thought this would be a great natural preserve-type area that we could really develop into a high-end, state-of-the-art preserve with a focus on nature and mountain biking," said Mark Collier, Erlanger's director of economic development.

Here's where the project stands and what's ahead

The project broke ground at a ceremonial event near the development site in late October and is still only in its first phase.

While the park is planned to be over 1,000 acres, this first phase of the project will primarily focus on a much smaller area near the Erlanger neighborhood of Cherry Hill. This plot of land is sandwiched between the neighborhood and the Interstate 275 and I-71 interchange, near the Commonwealth Avenue exit.

A spouse's options for an inherited IRA

Allworth Advice
Amy Wagner and Steve Hruby
Guest columnists

Every week, Allworth Financial's Amy Wagner and Steve Hruby, CFP®, answer your questions. If you, a friend, or someone in your family has a money issue or problem, feel free to send those questions to yourmoney@enquirer.com.

D.R. in Green Township: I lost my husband last year. He had an IRA that I got. Haven't wanted to deal with it until now, so can you help?

Answer: We're so sorry for your loss. As unintentional as it might have been, you actually followed one of our key rules for anyone who goes through an emotionally charged life event, such as losing a spouse: Do not make any big financial decisions, at least for a little while. Grief can cloud judgment. Instead, a clear head can help ensure that any choices are grounded in a clear understanding of your financial situation and that you're not acting out of impulse or distress. With that said, you have a few options for what you can do with the IRA you inherited since you're a spousal beneficiary.

First, if you have your own IRA, you can roll this account into yours and treat the money as if it's your own (if you don't already have one, you could open a brand-new account in your name). This can be a good option if you don't immediately need the money and you're looking to keep it in a tax-advantaged account for as long as possible.

A second possibility is to transfer the funds into something called an Inherited IRA. This typically makes the most sense if you're younger than 59 ½ and need access to the money since you won't be subject to the early withdrawal penalty.

Third, if you don't need the money for living expenses, you could roll over the IRA to one that's in your name (as we mention in the first example above), then convert those assets to a Roth IRA. This option can be beneficial if you anticipate being in a higher tax bracket in the future and you have funds to pay for the conversion outside of the account.

It's critical to take enough time to mourn so any financial decisions you make moving forward are thoughtful and strategic.

A final option is to take a lump sum distribution. This is not the most tax-efficient choice since you would need to pay taxes on the withdrawal. However, you would have immediate access to the money if needed.

We should also point out that your husband's age and whether or not he was already taking Required Minimum Distributions (RMDs) from his IRA also impacts this decision because in some cases you would have to keep taking the withdrawals, and in other cases you would have the option to delay.

Here's the Allworth Advice: There are a multitude of other IRA rules to think through and considerations to make in regard to your situation, so we highly recommend reaching out to a fiduciary financial advisor to help walk you through them. The best course of action will depend on your financial needs, age, long-term goals and more.

And most importantly, make sure you're truly ready to embark on this process. It's critical to take enough time to mourn so any financial decisions you make moving forward are thoughtful and strategic. We wish you luck.

First Amendment aids AP's White House case

Strictly Legal
Jack Greiner

The Associated Press recently filed a lawsuit in federal court in Washington, D.C., against three White House officials – White House Press Secretary Karoline Leavitt, White House Deputy Chief of Staff Taylor Budowich and White House Chief of Staff Susan Wiles – based on their refusal to grant White House press pool access to AP reporters based on the AP's decision to continue to refer to the recently renamed "Gulf of America" as the "Gulf of Mexico," its name for the past 400 years.

As AP notes in its lawsuit, "On Jan. 20, 2025, President Trump issued an executive order renaming the Gulf of Mexico as the Gulf of America. The gulf shares borders with Mexico and Cuba, and by its own terms, the executive order applied only to the area within the United States. The gulf has been known as the Gulf of Mexico for over 400 years and remains known around the world as the Gulf of Mexico."

On Jan. 23, the AP released guidance specifying that it would refer to the Gulf of Mexico by its original name in its reporting and stylebook while also acknowledging the new name. The AP explained its decision very simply, "as a global news agency that disseminates news around the world, the AP must ensure that place names and geography are easily recognizable to all audiences." The AP added that it "regularly reviews its style guidance regarding name changes, in part to ensure its guidance reflects common usage."

So, a simple difference of opinion, "you say potato, I say potawto" kind of thing. Easy to resolve, right? Ha, ha. Just kidding.

On the morning of Feb. 11, Leavitt told AP Chief White House Correspondent Zeke Miller that AP journalists would not be permitted in the Oval Office as press pool members until and unless the AP revised its stylebook to refer to the gulf as the Gulf of America.

The White House made good on its threats, barring AP reporters and/or photographers from nearly a half dozen events, including an Oval Office presidential executive order signing and press conference with Elon Musk, the swearing-in of Director of National Intelligence Tulsi Gabbard and a White House East Room press conference held by President Trump and Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi, which was open to other pool members and journalists with White House credentials.

The idea that a president can shun a reporting service because he disagrees with its word choices is exactly what the First Amendment is meant to prohibit.

The AP is relying on two primary arguments. First, that journalists enjoy a First Amendment interest in access to areas of the White House open to the press pool and that interest may not be denied without due process of law under the Fifth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

The AP also contends that denying journalists access to White House press events based upon the content of the journalist's speech is prohibited under the First Amendment.

In response, the White House doesn't deny that its decision is based on the AP's disagreement with how to refer to the gulf; it merely contends that the president has discretion over who he grants access.

On Feb. 24, the court denied the AP's request for a temporary restraining order but set the matter for expedited briefing on a motion for preliminary injunction. The preliminary injunction hearing is set for March 20, so we should have an answer soon.

I'm rooting for the AP here, not just because my friends Chuck Tobin, Jay Brown and Max Mishkin are representing it. The idea that a president can shun a reporting service because he disagrees with its word choices is exactly what the First Amendment is meant to prohibit. This White House doesn't get that, but ideally the courts will.

Johnny C. Taylor Jr.
SPECIAL TO USA TODAY

Question: I've been in the same role for several years and feel stuck. I know I want to make a change, but I'm unsure what direction to take. Would hiring a career coach help me figure out my next steps? How do I find one that's the right fit? – Eugene

Answer: Feeling stuck in your career can be overwhelming, but taking proactive steps – such as working with a career coach – can provide clarity and direction. A good career coach will help you assess your skills, interests and long-term goals, guiding you toward the right career path.

- Clarify your needs: Identifying your main goals will help you choose a coach with the right expertise.
- Check credentials and experience: Look for certifications from reputable organizations such as the International Coach Federation. Coaches with experience in your industry can provide more tailored advice.
- Look at reviews and success stories: Client testimonials and case studies can give you insight into a coach's effectiveness.
- Schedule an introductory call: Many coaches offer free consultations. Use this time to gauge their coaching style, ask about their approach and ensure their personality aligns with your needs.
- Understand the process and costs: Career coaching can be an investment, so ask about session formats, expected outcomes and pricing before deciding.

A career coach can be a great resource, but real progress comes from taking action. Stay open to new possibilities, put in the work, and use the insights from coaching to create a career path that excites and fulfills you.

When a potential employer calls a job applicant's previous employers, what can they actually find out about the applicant? Can they ask about whether they were fired and why? – Robert Potential employers conduct reference checks to verify your work history and assess your past performance. They can ask about your job title, responsibilities, work ethic, ability to work with others and overall performance. Some may also ask if you're eligible for rehire.

When it comes to terminations, the information that can be shared depends on company policies and state regulations. While some employers will confirm if you were terminated, they may avoid sharing details due to legal risks. Others may disclose the reason if their policy permits or if required by industry regulations.

However, certain topics are off-limits. Equal Employment Opportunity laws prohibit employers from asking about age, religion, disabilities or other protected characteristics. Some states also have laws restricting the disclosure of salary histories.

Many companies require a signed release before providing details beyond basic employment verification. Even with a release, some will confirm only job titles and dates of employment.

Park

This part of the park will generally follow the path of Sycamore Tree Lane, branching off into Old Erlanger Road, which is currently closed off.

However, as part of the first phase, the city will reopen Old Erlanger Road and revitalize that path into a multimodal road, serving as the park's "spine," Collier said.

Along with the reopening of the "spine," the first phase of the project also includes the development of the dog park and converting Sycamore Tree Lane into a one-way road to prevent tractor-trailer traffic from entering the Cherry Hill neighborhood, Collier said. The dog park is set to be completed by July 2025.

The completion of the entire 1,000-acre park is projected to take years and will require cooperation from the city's project partners like developer Corporex and neighboring counties. Collier acknowledged the park may never even be completed.

"It's going to be a multi-year, multiphase project that truly may never be completed because there is so much opportunity to build into the trail network," Collier said.

How much will the project cost?

The city of Erlanger has budgeted $900,000 for phase one of the project. Additionally, the city has secured $250,000 in grant funding from the National Parks Service to aid in the construction.

Once city council decides to fund future phases of the project, Collier said the city can then move forward with adding other amenities, such as the mountain bike and hiking trails and picnic areas.

The park is expected to have a significant economic impact on the region. The project is estimated to create over 1,000 jobs and triple the amount of local spending, according to the Eons Adventure Park website.

Grocery prices hit consumers differently

Lower-income areas feel inflation the most

Betty Lin-Fisher
USA TODAY

Grocery prices were on the rise well before the national egg shortage. In the last five years, grocery prices have increased nearly 25%, according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

But where in the country are consumers feeling the pinch the worst?

Personal finance website WalletHub analyzed the prices of 26 common grocery items in 50 states, then added the costs and compared them to the median household income to determine where people are spending the greatest percentage of their income on groceries.

The WalletHub's analysis found the greatest percentage is spent in Mississippi (2.64%), and the lowest percentage is spent in New Jersey (1.50%).

The states spending the highest percentage of their income on groceries also coincide with the states where the median income is the lowest in the country, said Chip Lubo, writer and analyst for WalletHub.

"While the cost of these groceries is probably lower than you would expect in maybe California or in the Northeast, the numbers are higher because they have less income to spend on those groceries," Lupo said.

For instance, Mississippi's median annual household income is just under $53,000, which is below the national average of $74,600, Lupo said. Compare that to New Jersey, where the average median income is $118,000, he said.

The prices of groceries was analyzed in January, so the research does not account for the latest price spikes in egg prices due to the nationwide shortage from the bird flu, Lupo said.

"You could probably expect spikes all across the board in all 50 states" for egg prices, he said.

A new WalletHub survey analyzed what states were the highest and lowest for their grocery spending compared to their median annual income.
CODY SCANLAN/DES MOINES REGISTER FILE

Grocery prices were up 1.9% in January from 1.2% in January 2024, according to the latest Consumer Price Index figures, USA TODAY previously reported. Prices were up 0.5% from December 2024, the largest month-over-month increase since October 2022. Eggs had the largest monthly price jump, up 15.2% after the H5N1 bird flu disrupted egg production.

Regional differences

Not everyone feels the impact of rising food prices equally, said David Ortega, a food economist and professor at Michigan State University.

"It is low-income households who are hit the hardest, as they spend a larger share of their disposable income on food," said Ortega, who is not affiliated with the WalletHub survey. "These are the individuals who are having to make real adjustments in order to be able to put food on the table.

Similarly, in states where median incomes are lower, grocery costs take up a greater portion of household budgets, making price increases more financially straining."

Food price inflation varies by region, Ortega said, partly due to differences in retail operating costs like labor and rent, which are often passed on to consumers through higher prices.

Variations in consumer shopping habits and demand for specific foods can influence inflation rates across regions, too. Transportation costs also play a role, as areas farther from food production, ports and distribution hubs might face higher prices due to increased shipping expenses, he said.

Tips to save

Although grocery inflation or the rate of price increases has moderated, prices remain high, Ortega said, and inflationary pressures persist due to factors like the ongoing impacts of bird flu on egg and poultry prices, extreme weather events affecting food production, and rising labor costs. There is also a great deal of uncertainty surrounding key policies of President Donald Trump's administration – such as tariffs and mass deportations – which could drive food prices higher.

Here are some tips from Ortega to stretch a budget at the grocery store:

- Plan ahead and make a list: If shoppers take inventory of what they already have in their pantry and fridge before creating a detailed grocery list, it can help keep spending in check and avoid impulse purchases.
- Choose store brands: Opting for store-brand items can often reduce costs without sacrificing quality.
- Look for deals and sales: It can pay off to shop around and take advantage of advertised deals to save money.
- Don't assume bulk deals are always better: While bulk purchases can sometimes save money in the long run, they aren't always the best option as shoppers might end up with food that goes bad before they can use it.

Tesla seeks review of failed dealer bid

Wisconsin denies plan to open locations in state

Jeff Bollier
Green Bay Press-Gazette
USA TODAY NETWORK – WISCONSIN

In 2020, Tesla opened two galleries and service centers in Wisconsin, in Milwaukee and in Madison. Consumers can take a look at the vehicles available, learn more about Teslas and arrange service, but they can't buy a vehicle.
EDUARDO MUNOZ/REUTERS FILE

APPLETON, Wis. – Tesla Inc. estimates Wisconsinites each year buy 3,000 to 4,000 of its electric vehicles, but none of those sales happen in Wisconsin.

Wisconsinites who want to buy a Cybertruck or Model Y have to go to another state, frequently Illinois or Minnesota, because Wisconsin's "factory store" law bars vehicle manufacturers such as Tesla and Ford from owning vehicle dealerships with few exemptions.

In 2020, Tesla opened two galleries and service centers in Wisconsin, in Milwaukee and in Madison. Consumers can take a look at the vehicles available, learn more about Teslas and arrange service, but they can't buy a Tesla.

In March 2024, Tesla applied to the Wisconsin Department of Transportation for an exemption to turn both of those galleries into direct-to-consumer dealerships owned by Tesla. The application also indicated the company wanted to open two more dealerships in Glendale and in Grand Chute, a suburb of Appleton. An administrative law judge denied the request in October. Tesla objected, but a state administrator in December upheld the decision.

Earlier this year, Tesla filed a petition in Outagamie County Circuit Court asking a judge to either overturn the decision or order a new hearing on the request to open up to four direct-sales dealerships. The petition cited the 3,000-4,000 vehicle sales estimate for Wisconsin and indicated direct-sales dealerships in the state likely would increase that volume.

The Wisconsin Department of Justice has asked Judge Mitchell Metropulos to affirm the state's decision. The Wisconsin Automobile & Truck Dealers Association wants the decision upheld and also has requested the case be moved to Dane or Milwaukee county. Tesla will have spent more than a year on the effort by the time Metropulos convenes a procedural hearing in late March.

Wisconsin is among the states that do not allow vehicle manufacturers to own or operate sales dealerships. The state's "factory store" law aims to avoid unfair competition that could arise from a vehicle manufacturer owning the dealership, too. Instead, vehicle manufacturers need to contract with independent dealers.

Factories can request an exemption from the state, but they must prove there is no independent, licensed dealer available to sell the company's vehicles in a manner that fulfills the public interest and meets a factory's reasonable standards and uniform qualifications.

Tesla, in its Jan. 15 court petition to overturn the state's denial, claimed it qualifies for an exemption because no independent dealer meets the company's qualifications and standards and profit under its flat-price, direct-to-consumer sales model. It alternately claims it qualifies because state law does not apply or bar a nonfranchising factory such as Tesla from operating a dealership.

In its petition for judicial review, Tesla claimed that no independent dealership could profitably operate a Tesla dealership because it could not mark up vehicle prices to make a profit since consumers could go online and purchase a vehicle from the company for less. It also said the state's decision violated the company's right to economic liberty (selling EV cars and trucks) enshrined in the Wisconsin State Constitution.

Wisconsin Automobile & Truck Dealers Association, the state's auto dealership industry group, requested to participate in Tesla's exemption hearing and had representatives from four major independent dealerships testify that not only were they interested in Tesla dealerships, they could profitably operate such dealerships without having to mark up Tesla's prices.

Dealership representatives said they could make a profit via used electric vehicles trade-ins and sales, as well as EV service and maintenance.

The association also responded to Tesla's constitution claim by noting state law doesn't bar Tesla from selling cars to Wisconsinites, but it does bar the company from owning or controlling its vehicle dealerships.

A WADTA official declined to comment, citing the ongoing legal matter.

The exemption request went to a hearing before Administrative Law Judge Kristin Fredrick with the Wisconsin Department of Administration's Division of Hearings and Appeals.

Fredrick on Oct. 10, 2024, issued a ruling recommending Tesla's request be denied, to which the company objected in November. The company's reasons for objecting were reviewed by DHA Administrator Brian Hayes, who in a Dec. 17 decision affirmed the state's initial decision and denied Tesla's request for an exemption.

Hayes wrote that Tesla sought an exemption the state Legislature did not include in the "factory store" law that is based on "circular logic," namely that independent dealers can't qualify for a Tesla franchise solely because they are independent and not owned by Tesla.

"The law, as written, simply does not support the conclusion Tesla seeks," Hayes wrote.

Tesla's attorneys did not return a request for an interview or comment.

The company requests Metropulos issue a judgment that Tesla is entitled to a dealership license. Alternatively, it requested he hold a hearing on the irregularities in the review process it cited, reverse the decision and direct DHA to correct any errors in the procedure and, if necessary, grant Tesla a new hearing.

Many looking to other states for next vehicle

Bailey Schulz
USA TODAY

Paul Hanson was browsing for a used truck in 2023 with a specific checklist in mind: power locks and cruise control, but not too many bells and whistles. A gas engine. Enough towing capacity to pull his camper.

By the time he narrowed his search online, he could find only three vehicles in the country that fit his criteria, none of which were near his hometown of Brayton, Iowa. He decided to go with a 2021 GMC Sierra Heavy Duty in Seattle, but shipping the car anywhere close would cost roughly $2,500.

But there was another option. Hanson calculated that booking a one-way flight and making a road trip out of the weekend would cost closer to $1,200, including a hotel stay, food and gas. It was an easy choice for Hanson, a fan of road trips.

"I wanted, basically, a work truck with four doors," Hanson said. "I can go find a fully loaded F-250, or I can find a fully loaded any-sized truck, or any brand truck, closer to me, but I didn't want that because they are astronomically more expensive."

Picky shoppers and used car prices have pushed some buyers to look out of state for their next vehicle. Online marketplaces and shipping options have made car shopping across the country easier than ever, but experts warn buyers should take extra precautions if purchasing from another state.

Brian Moody, executive editor of online marketplace Autotrader and automotive research company Kelley Blue Book, said buying out-of-state makes sense for certain buyers, especially if they're looking for a specific vehicle. Moody had a Saab sedan shipped in from Maryland when he couldn't find what he wanted nearby.

"The car had 50,000 miles and it only had one owner, which to me, made it feel like this car was worth getting even if it cost me an extra $1,200" to ship, Moody said.

But "generally speaking, anyone who lives in a decent-sized town, unless you're looking for something very specific, there's going to be plenty of Honda Accords and Chevy pickups and Toyota minivans in your hometown."

"It's really difficult to buy a car you haven't seen in person. You can look at everything on the car (online) and think, 'This is great.' And then it gets to you at home and you're like, 'Oh my gosh, it needs tires in the next six months.' "

Brian Moody
Executive editor of Autotrader and Kelley Blue Book

Moody warned that buyers will need to take precautions if buying sight unseen. He suggested hiring a prepurchase used car inspection service before buying.

"It's really difficult to buy a car you haven't seen in person," he said. "You can look at everything on the car (online) and think, 'This is great.' And then it gets to you at home and you're like, 'Oh my gosh, it needs tires in the next six months.' "

A couple more things to consider if buying out of state:

- Buyers will generally pay sales tax where the vehicle is registered, so there's no advantage to buying from a sales tax-free state.
- Drivers should obtain a temporary registration from the dealership before driving the vehicle home or, if buying from a private party, they should make sure they have all of the appropriate documents required by each state's motor vehicle department signed and dated before driving away.
- Drivers should also call their insurance company ahead of the purchase, according to Ivan Drury, director of insights at automotive research site Edmunds.

Navigating unaffordable housing markets across US

Hillary Stalker
Special to Nashville Tennessean
USA TODAY NETWORK – TENNESSEE

Renters should continue to keep an eye on the housing market. Although the current trends point away from affordability, good deals can pop up and local conditions can change.
KRIS CRAIG/PROVIDENCE JOURNAL FILE

It is no secret that the cost to afford a home has increased throughout the years. Many of those who fall into the younger millennial generation and below have grown to accept that they may not be able to afford what used to be considered the "American Dream." Research can now back up those feelings of why a home purchase seems out of reach.

In 2025, the average household income required to buy a home is $106,000 to $107,000. That number has doubled from the estimated household income needed in 2020 at $47,500.

While we know that different locations play a factor in home affordability, as the national average climbs at an unfathomable rate, that just means that the places that would cost more than average are climbing right alongside the national numbers.

According to January data from Greater Nashville Realtors, the median price of a single-family home in this area is $490,000. That represents a 6.5% jump from this time last year, and new home projects less than $300,000 are declining.

This is a far cry from what I would call "affordable" for many. In an ideal world, the homebuyer should spend 30% or less of their gross income on housing costs, including mortgage payments. Stubbornly high interest rates and limited availability, specifically in Middle Tennessee, make it harder for people in our community to find homes at affordable prices. Mortgage rates have jumped more than three full percentage points in the last few years and many hoped that they would come back down by now.

Where does that leave the next generation of home buyers? Should they abandon the idea of homeownership?

Whatever you choose, you should not look at the inability to afford a house as a personal failure. Factors outside of our individual control have fundamentally changed the landscape for homebuyers. And the good news is that home ownership is not the only path to wealth building.

Renting does not fit the stereotypical "American Dream," but it affords a few key advantages. The ability to move to areas with lower costs can free up resources to save aggressively toward your financial goals. Keep an eye on the rental market, as well. If rental demand softens, use it as leverage to gain incentives or lower rates when renewing your lease.

Renters should continue to keep an eye on the housing market. Although the current trends point away from affordability, good deals can pop up and local conditions can change. We tell our clients not to try and time the stock market, and the same holds true of the housing market.

If you have the capability to purchase a home, explore your options and fully understand the impact of interest rates on your budget. Your path to ownership may look very different than that of the generations that came before you. And that's all right. Concentrate on what makes financial sense for you, not someone else's idea of what you "should" do.

Federal workers fired after good reviews

USA TODAY

Robyn Smyth, a former program director with the National Science Foundation, attends a protest Feb. 25 on Capitol Hill to pressure lawmakers to respond to federal workers who are being removed from their jobs. PROVIDED BY ROBYN SMYTH

Samantha Leach was thrilled eight months ago to find a job she loved at the federal Bureau of Engraving and Printing, working with a team that appreciated her skills and enthusiasm.

That joy came crashing down in February when she learned she was among tens of thousands of probationary federal government employees abruptly fired.

Even a recent performance review with a perfect score of five out of five couldn't protect her as President Donald Trump moved to fire the vast majority of the federal government's probationary employees.

The reference to poor job performance in her termination letter was an additional, gutting blow, she said.

"I was good at my job, very good at my job," she said. "For someone like me who wants nothing more in the world than to fit somewhere and contribute, to be fired when I'm doing that is kind of soul-crushing."

Dozens of former federal workers told USA TODAY reporters they were particularly hurt and angry that their termination letters cited poor work despite performance awards or years of positive reviews. Several fear the letter could keep them from getting other government jobs or even follow them into the private sector.

On Thursday, a federal judge temporarily halted firings conducted by the Office of Personnel Management. But he did not order the rehiring of fired employees. The Merit Systems Protection Board reinstated six fired employees in six different federal agencies so a federal workers' board can investigate whether their terminations were legal.

Each of the former employees interviewed for this article had received commendations, cash awards or multiple positive reviews – yet were told they were being fired for poor performance.

When asked for a response to the board's decision or what the White House wanted to say to employees with positive reviews who received a disparaging termination letter, White House deputy press secretary Anna Kelly said in a statement, "President Trump is working every day to deliver on the American people's mandate to eliminate wasteful spending and make federal agencies more efficient, which includes removing probationary employees who are not mission critical."

'I think I'm screwed'

Tony Ruiz of Orange County, California, was fired on Feb. 3, just 10 days before his probation as a veteran service representative at the Department of Veterans Affairs was supposed to end.

The disabled Army veteran said he was recruited after 15 years in the private sector to help fellow vets with their claims, such as getting a medical procedure approved or adding a spouse to their policy. He said he often handled up to 40 claims a day.

He was aghast that the termination letter criticized his "unacceptable performance."

In August, Ruiz was the first employee in his division to win an employee of the quarter award, which came with a $1,000 cash prize and was presented by Veterans Affairs Undersecretary Joshua Jacobs. His performance report, reviewed by USA TODAY, was positive, with Ruiz receiving an "exceptional" score in half of the categories.

"I'm a poor performer?" he said.

He had a hard time even leaving the house at first and is taking some time to recover from "the punch," he said.

"As far as a federal job, I think I'm screwed," he said. "I'm heartbroken, I'm upset. I don't think any American federal employee deserves this, especially a veteran."

'This is the official record now'

Last year, Megan Ruxton took a pay cut from her private-sector job with a digital health technology company to join the Food and Drug Administration as a social scientist with the Center for Tobacco Products. She helped screen tobacco products before market to ensure they would not worsen the harmful effects of tobacco for adults or appeal to children.

She had hoped that she and other probationary employees would be spared because their work was in the public interest and funded through tobacco industry fees, not taxpayer dollars. But on Feb. 22, the bad news hit.

What angered her the most was the boilerplate language blaming poor performance. Her personnel record reviewed by USA TODAY showed she only received favorable reviews.

"I am getting choked up now just talking about it," Ruxton said. "Like many of my colleagues, I've always been the best at anything I do. I have never been told that my performance is inadequate. Ever."

She worries the termination will hurt her chances of landing a new job, even in the private sector.

"This is the official record now. If I am asked if I have ever been terminated from a position, I am going to have to say yes and I may or may not be given the opportunity to explain why," she said. "I think to some degree there are people out there who will see this and understand that this is not representative of who I am. But I can't guarantee that."

'It was very insulting'

About six months ago, aquatic scientist Robyn Smyth publicly announced that she had successfully completed her probationary period as an environmental biology program director at the National Science Foundation, a position she said she worked decades to get.

Then a couple of weeks ago, Smyth learned that the agency had lengthened the probationary period and she was actually still in it. And then she was fired along with 167 colleagues.

Clash over Ukraine divides Republicans

Some GOP lawmakers lash out at Zelenskyy

WASHINGTON – An angry White House clash between Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy and Donald Trump divided the U.S. president's fellow Republicans and dimmed prospects that Congress will approve any further aid for Kyiv in its war with Russia.

Some Republicans who had long supported Ukraine lashed out at Zelenskyy after Friday's exchange, in which Trump and Vice President JD Vance berated the Ukrainian leader before the world's media, accusing him of disrespect.

Sen. Lindsey Graham, R-S.C., called for Zelenskyy to change his tune or resign, just hours after attending a friendly meeting between Zelenskyy and a dozen senators.

"What I saw in the Oval Office was disrespectful, and I don't know if we can ever do business with Zelenskyy again," Graham, a close Trump ally, told reporters as he left the White House after the clash, which drove relations with Kyiv's most important wartime ally to a new low.

"He either needs to resign and send somebody over that we can do business with, or he needs to change," Graham said.

"The United States of America will no longer be taken for granted," Sen. Bill Hagerty of Tennessee, who was ambassador to Japan during Trump's first term, posted on X.

But even as most Republicans rallied behind Trump and Vance, some joined Democrats in defending Ukraine.

New York Rep. Mike Lawler, in a post on X, called the Oval Office meeting "a missed opportunity for both the United States and Ukraine – an agreement that would undoubtedly result in stronger economic and security cooperation."

"A bad day for America's foreign policy," he said in a statement. "Ukraine wants independence, free markets and rule of law. It wants to be part of the West. Russia hates us and our Western values. We should be clear that we stand for freedom."

Minerals deal on hold

Zelenskyy was in Washington to sign an agreement to jointly develop Ukraine's rich natural resources with the U.S.

The Ukrainian leader had seen the meeting with Trump and Vance as an opportunity to persuade the U.S. not to side with Russian President Vladimir Putin in his war with Moscow's smaller neighbor. Instead, Zelenskyy was told to leave the White House and the agreement was left unsigned.

Kyiv's backers had hoped the deal would help win more support from Trump's Republicans – who hold slim majorities in the Senate and House of Representatives – for future aid.

Congress has approved $175 billion in assistance since Putin launched his full-scale invasion three years ago, but the most recent measure passed in April 2024, when Democrats controlled the Senate and Democrat Joe Biden was in the White House.

Even then, congressional Republicans slow-walked the bill under pressure from then-candidate Trump, who has been skeptical of further military aid to Ukraine, leading to delays in delivering weapons that put Ukrainian troops on the back foot in the battlefield.

If Trump, the party leader, had skin in the game and was promoting a "very big" minerals deal he had negotiated, analysts said, it would likely have rallied Republican support for Ukraine aid.

Some Republicans who have advocated for assisting Ukraine said they hoped relations could be rebuilt.

Rep. Michael McCaul, former chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, said he still hoped for a real and lasting peace that ensures Ukraine will be free from further Russian aggression.

"I also urge President Zelenskyy to sign the mineral deal immediately," the Texas lawmaker posted on X. "It will create an economic partnership between the United States and Ukraine. It is in both of our interests to get this deal done."

Ukrainians reel from crisis

Ukrainians faced a stark new reality on Saturday, after a White House clash between Zelenskyy and Trump plunged ties between Kyiv and its top military backer into an unprecedented new low.

Friday's confrontation flared over differing visions of how to end Russia's three-year-old invasion, with Zelenskyy seeking strong security guarantees from a Trump administration that has embraced diplomacy with Russian President Vladimir Putin.

Ukrainians, many of them hardened by three years of war, rallied around Zelenskyy but also expressed dismay about the future of U.S. backing for Kyiv's war effort as larger and better equipped Russian forces march across swaths of the east.

"Trump and Putin are dividing up the world – that's what I would say," said Kyiv resident Liudmyla Stetsevych, 47. "I don't know what will come of it."

However, she and other Ukrainians interviewed by Reuters expressed hope that Ukraine's allies in Europe would boost political and military support if the U.S. dialed back its own.

"We are really very grateful to (the U.S.) for the support we have received all this time and continue to receive, but our dignity and honor should come first," said Alina Zhaivoronko, standing near a sea of small flags in central Kyiv commemorating Ukraine's war dead.

"The Americans don't know the real situation, what's going on here," said 54-year-old Ella Kazantseva, an east Ukraine native. "They don't understand. Everything is beautiful for them."

Ukrainian lawmaker Andrii Osadchuk said he had not been surprised by the tone from Trump and Vance, and that it was further evidence that Kyiv's Western partners would need to do more.

Top officials including Zelenskyy have sought to cast Ukraine's defense against Russia's full-scale invasion as central to European security more broadly.

"Not just a lot, but probably everything will depend on Europe – both for itself and for Ukraine," Osadchuk told Reuters.

Zelenskyy was to meet British Prime Minister Keir Starmer on Saturday, Starmer's office said, ahead of a wider summit of European leaders in London on Sunday to discuss a security backstop to any peace agreement between Moscow and Kyiv.

Education Department offering new buyouts

Zachary Schermele
USA TODAY

WASHINGTON – Quit by Monday and get $25,000. Maybe.

That was the message of a Friday afternoon email from the U.S. Department of Education's top human resources official, who made the "one-time offer" to all staffers ahead of what she called a "very significant" impending workforce reduction.

"We are pleased to offer ED employees up to a $25,000 Voluntary Separation Incentive Payment (VSIP) starting today, including those who wish to retire," wrote Jacqueline Clay, the agency's chief human capital officer.

Staffers have until Monday at 11:59 p.m. to accept. Their resignations would take effect March 31, according to the email.

Not every employee who elects to take the buyout would be eligible for a $25,000 payment, however. Clay's memo says the award would be "the equivalent of severance pay or $25,000, whichever is less."

She encouraged staffers to use their benefit statements to estimate their severance packages before taking the offer.

There are more caveats: Those eligible must have been employed by the federal government for at least three consecutive years. They also cannot have received a student loan repayment benefit in the last three years. Other types of awards – including relocation, recruitment or retention bonuses – would be disqualifying for some.

The memo is the latest sign of tumult at the Education Department, which has already experienced serious turnover since President Donald Trump took office. His administration has warned of major layoffs across the federal workforce in the coming weeks and months. The president said recently he wants the department to be "closed immediately."

Linda McMahon, his nominee to lead the department – who will likely be confirmed by the GOP-controlled Senate on Monday – acknowledged in her confirmation hearings that only Congress has the power to shutter federal agencies.

Trump sued by Democrats for seeking control of FEC

President Donald Trump was sued on Friday by the Democratic Party over a recent executive order it says violates federal election law by giving him too much power over the independent Federal Election Commission.

The lawsuit filed in the Washington federal court by three national Democratic committees is the party's first against Trump during the Republican's second White House term.

It comes as Democrats, outnumbered in Congress, seek an effective means to counteract far-reaching changes from Trump's first six weeks of his second term, including many steps to lessen government oversight and eliminate internal dissent.

Several dozen lawsuits have challenged other actions taken by Trump since his Jan. 20 inauguration.

Friday's lawsuit objects to a Feb. 18 order giving the White House more control over the election commission, the National Labor Relations Board, the Securities and Exchange Commission, and other traditionally independent agencies that normally operate day-to-day at arm's length from the president.

Critics have called the order an unprecedented power grab.

Democrats said enforcing it would essentially substitute Trump's views on election-related disputes for those of the bipartisan election commission, and let him dictate outcomes.

Other defendants include Attorney General Pam Bondi, the election commission and three commissioners.

A spokeswoman for the Justice Department said in an email: "This department has already been fighting in court to vigorously defend President Trump's agenda and will continue to do so."

The election commission said through a spokesman that it does not discuss litigation.

'Partisan' outcomes feared

Congress created the election commission in 1974 in the wake of the Watergate scandal, to oversee elections and enforce campaign finance laws.

The complaint quotes then-Republican President Gerald Ford saying both political parties had "expressed their pleasure with this bill, noting that it allows them to compete fairly."

But according to the complaint, letting Trump micromanage the commission would undermine its purpose, by allowing a "single partisan political figure" to rig campaign rules and resolve disputes against his opponents.

Trump's order makes his and Bondi's opinions on questions of law "controlling" for all federal employees performing their official duties, and bans executive branch employees from advancing contrary views.

The plaintiffs include the Democratic National Committee, the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee and the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee.

They said Trump's order is already causing irreparable harm, by making it harder for the Senate committee to defend against a complaint by the 2024 reelection campaign of Republican U.S. Sen. Ted Cruz of Texas over his opponent's advertisements.

The lawsuit seeks a declaration that a federal law shielding the election commission from "presidential coercion and control" is constitutional, and to block Trump's Feb. 18 order.

Noem says 'reforms' coming to FEMA

Visits Kentucky amid flood recovery effort

Lucas Aulbach
Louisville Courier Journal
USA TODAY NETWORK

Department of Homeland Security Secretary Kristi Noem, center, has said she would support ending FEMA "the way it exists today" and giving more power to local officials. SAM UPSHAW JR./LOUISVILLE COURIER JOURNAL

FRANKFORT, Ky. – Flood recovery efforts across Kentucky will cost "hundreds of millions" of dollars, Gov. Andy Beshear said, as the state continues to bounce back from the February storms that claimed more than 20 lives.

Speaking Wednesday before Department of Homeland Security Secretary Kristi Noem and other FEMA officials held a briefing to discuss flood relief, the governor said more work is ahead while thanking the federal team for their response over the past couple of weeks.

"There was zero politics played in any of this," he said. "They turned it around, they did their jobs and I'm grateful for the people of the commonwealth of Kentucky. And while I know there's different discussion that's out there about the future, I can tell you in the present, they did what we needed and are continuing to do what we need."

The state has reported 23 deaths due to the storms. Many of the fatalities occurred when people tried to drive through water, while several others were caused by hypothermia as temperatures plummeted in the days after the floods. Eleven counties in Kentucky are currently eligible for FEMA aid, with additional designations possible, and the federal Small Business Administration has approved disaster loans in 22 counties.

The president has said he's considering "getting rid of" the emergency response agency and instead allowing the government to provide aid directly to states. Billionaire Elon Musk has pushed forward significant cuts to the federal government since joining Trump's team and has been critical at times of FEMA, though the accuracy of many of his claims has been called into question.

Noem has said she would support ending the agency "the way it exists today" and giving more power to local officials. She reiterated those comments Wednesday in Frankfort, Kentucky, after her tour, which came hours after she and Small Business Administration leader Kelly Loeffler, also in attendance in Kentucky, met with Trump in his first full Cabinet meeting.

"If you saw a reduction in spending, it's probably going to be less people needed at the administrative level or less buildings in Washington, D.C., and more of those dollars being able to be deployed down to the local level," Noem told reporters ahead of a tour of the Kentucky Emergency Management office.

Many state legislators have said they would welcome such moves in the aftermath of the 2022 floods, which killed more than 40 people in eastern Kentucky.

> "If you saw a reduction in spending, it's probably going to be less people needed at the administrative level or less buildings in Washington, D.C."
> Kristi Noem
> Department of Homeland Security secretary

Republican state Rep. Mitch Whitaker said his community was devastated after that storm, and dealing with FEMA was a "huge issue" for his constituents, many of whom were denied benefits that their neighbors were granted and felt the agency was not transparent.

Republican state Senate President Robert Stivers said in February he would welcome FEMA "sending the money to where it is needed and letting the people who know how to use it, use it," with safeguards such as audits in place.

Whitaker added many of his neighbors were required to buy flood insurance in 2022 after storms rocked the region, but a number of them were unable to afford it. Noem said the country's flood insurance program is also in need of reform, as it's currently "so unaffordable for so many people."

"That's something that Congress is going to have to help us with," she said. "If (families are) making a choice between whether to put food on the table for their kids or buy flood insurance, I guarantee you their kids are going to come first."

In the meantime, more relief is needed. Noem said she'd heard stories of families who have been "absolutely devastated" by the storm, which has rendered key areas in many towns uninhabitable as cleanup efforts continue.

Eric Gibson, director of Kentucky Emergency Management, said about 2,300 people in the state are still without water, and about 20 state bridges were damaged, along with "many, many" county roads. Power outages are no longer an issue, he said – after peaking at about 40,000 outages statewide – but debris cleanup continues. Nearly 300 people are still sheltering at state parks, according to a Wednesday release from Beshear's office.

Republican state Sens. Phillip Wheeler and Scott Madon have had as close of a look at the damage as anyone. They live in regions of eastern Kentucky that were hit hard.

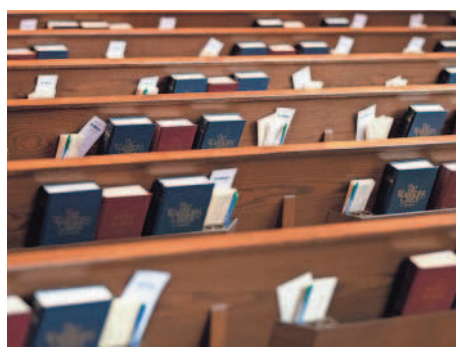

Speaking Wednesday in a Senate committee meeting, Madon said the initial repair estimate for the five counties he represents – Bell, Floyd, Harlan, Knott and Letcher – is $30 million. Wheeler, meanwhile, said preliminary estimates in Pike County alone probably exceed $50 million.

Residents and business owners whose properties took damage during the floods can apply for assistance via DisasterAssistance.gov, by calling 800-621-3362 or by using the FEMA app. Beshear has encouraged those who want to help to contribute to the Team Kentucky Storm Relief Fund, which he said has now raised enough money to cover funeral costs for each person killed.

Faith census: Decline of Christianity complicated

Liam Adams
Nashville Tennessean
USA TODAY NETWORK – TENNESSEE

The share of Christians is down by 9 percentage points from a decade ago and the religiously unaffiliated up by 6 percentage points, according to the Pew Research Center's Religious Landscape Study. MAX GERSH/COMMERCIAL APPEAL

A sweeping census on the state of American religion reveals a less sensational tale of Christianity in decline and the rise of the religiously unaffiliated compared to a decade ago.

Pew Research Center released its latest Religious Landscape Study on Wednesday, the nonpartisan research center's third-ever report of this kind on U.S. religious identity, belief and practice. The last two reports were in 2014 and 2007.

According to the new study, 62% of U.S. adults identify as Christian, 29% are religiously unaffiliated, often called "nones," and 7% identify with other religions including Judaism, Islam, Buddhism and Hinduism. The share of Christians is down by 9 percentage points from a decade ago and the religiously unaffiliated up by 6 percentage points, though Pew researchers said it's a complex trend.

"One of the big takeaways is … we're seeing recent stabilization within American Christianity amid a much longer period of decline," said Greg Smith, Pew senior associate director, in a Feb. 19 news conference.

Few other reports offer as comprehensive a picture of American religion, with the next closest being the Public Religion Research Institute's American Values Atlas. The new Religious Landscape Study and an interactive online tool, based on research conducted in 2023-24, outline many major trends in the U.S.

Generational differences, such as the fact younger Americans are less religious than older ones, drive many of the trends assessed in the study.

"That means for lasting stability to take hold in U.S. religion, something would need to change," Smith said.

Decline across various sects

Despite steady rates of interest in certain spiritual practices and ideas across various demographics, major religious institutions continue to falter.

Pew reported the four top categories of Christian adults have all declined. Those categories are:

- 23% of U.S. adults identify as evangelical Protestants, down from 25% in 2014.
- 19% are Catholic, down from 21% in 2014.
- 11% are mainline Protestant, down from 15% in 2014.
- 5% are part of historically Black Protestant traditions, down from 6% in 2014.

Smaller percentages of U.S. adults identify with top Protestant denominations. But defying that downward spiral are nondenominational evangelicals, a group that's deeply religious but doesn't necessarily embrace denominational labels. The "nondenominational evangelical family" grew by one percentage point since 2014.

"It's always been the case that many people choose a local congregation in part based on pragmatic considerations," Penny Edgell, a University of Minnesota sociologist and Pew expert advisor, said in the Feb. 19 news conference. "That probably has increased. … People are in general less concerned than they used to be about religious doctrine. They are more likely to hold a set of common beliefs."

US judge further blocks Trump's order on youth gender-affirming care

A federal judge late Friday extended an order blocking U.S. President Donald Trump's administration from withholding federal funding from medical providers in four Democratic-led states that provide gender-affirming care to transgender youth under 19.

U.S. District Court Judge Lauren King in Seattle issued a preliminary injunction preventing the administration from enforcing two of the Republican president's executive orders in the states of Colorado, Minnesota, Oregon and Washington, after concluding they were unconstitutional.

King, an appointee of Trump's Democratic predecessor Joe Biden, agreed with those states' attorneys general that the two executive orders intruded on Congress' power to appropriate federal funding by withholding research and education grants from medical institutions that provide such care.

She said Trump's orders also unconstitutionally treated people differently based on their sex or transgender status in violation of the equal protection guarantee of the U.S. Constitution's Fifth Amendment.

She called out one of Trump's executive orders that he signed on his first day back in the White House on Jan. 20 which directed the federal government to recognize only two, biologically distinct sexes – male and female – and directed agencies to ensure grant funds do not promote "gender ideology."

"This Order denies the very existence of transgender people and instead seeks to erase them from the federal vocabulary altogether and eliminate medical care for gender dysphoria at federally funded medical institutions," she wrote.

King on Feb. 14 issued a temporary restraining order blocking Trump's orders' enforcement while she weighed issuing the longer-term injunction. Another judge in Maryland has temporarily blocked Trump's orders nationwide while he also weighs an injunction request.

> U.S. District Court Judge Lauren King on Feb. 14 issued a temporary restraining order blocking Trump's orders' enforcement.

The White House did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

The lawsuit was filed after Trump signed a second executive order on Jan. 28 that announced the government "will not fund, sponsor, promote, assist, or support the so-called 'transition' of a child from one sex to another, and it will rigorously enforce all laws that prohibit or limit these destructive and life-altering procedures."

The treatments at issue include puberty-blocking medication, hormones and sometimes surgery.

More than half of the 50 states have passed laws or policies that ban gender-affirming care for minors, some of which have been blocked or overturned by the courts. A challenge to Tennessee's ban has been heard by the U.S. Supreme Court, whose ultimate ruling could determine the legality of such bans.

Travel resource now excludes some

State Department guidance changed by Trump administration

Nathan Diller
USA TODAY

Some LGBTQ+ travelers say changes removing references to transgender and other identities have left them questioning whether State Department travel recommendations are useful or trustworthy. DAVID DEE DELGAD/REUTERS FILE

Ash was looking at a map before their trip to Spain last year when they realized they would be close to Morocco.

"I love the food, the architecture. I started getting really excited," the 34-year-old said. "Then I was like, 'OK, before I get ahead of myself, I should pause and look online.' "

Ash, who is transgender and nonbinary, wasn't sure whether it'd be safe to visit. There have been reports of violent crime and threats against members of the LGBTQ+ community in the African country, and same-sex sexual activity is criminalized.

The U.S. State Department's LGBTQI+ Travelers page was one of the sites that helped the Bay Area resident determine not to stop there. But last month, its language was modified to remove references to trans and other queer travelers, leaving only "LGB."

Ash, who works in marketing, no longer feels represented in the guidance they once found helpful.

"I mean, to me that spells it pretty clearly that this is not a resource for people like me, and I do not expect it to be useful at all," they said.

Some sources in this article are identified by first name only due to safety and privacy concerns.

Ash is among a number of LGBTQ+ travelers who said the changes have left them questioning whether those State Department recommendations are useful or trustworthy.

How did travel guidance change?

The State Department has removed language addressing many LGBTQ+ travelers, including those who are transgender, queer, intersex and asexual, leaving guidance only for those who are lesbian, gay or bisexual, according to an archived version of the page.

Language warning travelers of conversion therapy practices in some countries has been pared down, and a section for those with an X gender marker on their passports has been removed almost entirely. The changes came after President Donald Trump issued an executive order requiring the federal government to recognize only male and female sexes and that they "are not changeable."

Similar references were purged or edited on other government websites.

Chicago-based Syd canceled a planned February trip to Mexico because they weren't sure if their passport, which had an X gender marker, would be valid or not. The 26-year-old, who is nonbinary, eventually got the marker changed.

A spokesperson for the State Department told USA TODAY in January that it had suspended processing applications "seeking a different sex marker than that defined by the terms in the Executive Order."

"It's definitely partially, like, we're being left out – like, trans people specifically are being left out of the conversation, but at the same time, they're being targeted," said Syd, who works as a teacher.

They noted that even the website's previous language felt more like a starting point than a comprehensive guide.

"Was it super specific? No, it wasn't super specific. Did I have to do further research? Yes," they said. "But at least the information didn't feel like it was completely bogus."

The State Department referred a request for comment to the White House. A White House official referred USA TODAY to the president's executive orders.

'Frustrating but also hurtful'

John Tanzella, president and CEO of the International LGBTQ+ Travel Association, said travel guidance "should reflect the full diversity of our community, not just because it's the right thing to do but because it directly impacts traveler safety."

"Trans and gender-diverse travelers often face unique challenges that their cisgender counterparts do not, including invasive airport screenings, difficulties with gender markers on passports, and barriers to accessing gender-affirming accommodations," he said in an email.

Depending on the destination, they may also face legal restrictions or heightened discrimination.

Even for some who are still represented on the site, the changes raise questions.

As a gay man, James Jones-Chatelain said he has used the website for travel planning in the past and found the updates "frustrating but also hurtful because (the Trump administration) had to go out of their way to remove a resource that was already there when they arrived."

Jones-Chatelain, who works as a maintenance coordinator for an apartment management company, felt the State Department's move could have implications for all LGBTQ+ travelers.

"With them specifically modifying their website against one particular portion of the community, who's to say that it's still a safe or trustworthy source for the rest of the community?" he said.

What other resources can LGBTQ+ travelers use?

The State Department isn't the only place travelers can find recommendations.

"While the remaining information (on the State Department website) may still offer useful insights, we encourage travelers to consult multiple sources when planning their trips," Tanzella said.

IGLTA offers travel guides, and he noted that queer media outlets and LGBTQ+ content creators share on-the-ground experiences. Ash similarly said that Reddit is helpful for finding residents who can share local perspectives.

For their part, Ash's approach to international travel hasn't changed; they are still cautious about where they choose to visit. They are more concerned by the idea of their plane being diverted to a U.S. state that is less welcoming to LGBTQ+ visitors.

"I would say my feelings still remain the same, more or less, in terms of my safety going abroad," Ash said. "If anything, my feelings about my safety returning home have been the things that I've been most nervous about."

Ex-Gov. Cuomo joins race to unseat Adams in NYC

REUTERS

NEW YORK – Andrew Cuomo announced on Saturday he is running to become mayor of New York City, more than three years after he resigned in disgrace as governor of New York after being accused of sexually harassing a number of women who worked for him and misleading the public about COVID-19 deaths.

Cuomo, 67, denies the allegations. He is among the most well-known of a number of candidates challenging embattled Mayor Eric Adams to become the Democratic Party's nominee in the primary election in June.

"I know what needs to be done and I know how to do it," Cuomo said in a video message, saying the city needs a bold plan to address crime, mental illness and other concerns, and calling for a permanent increase in police numbers and the construction of thousands of affordable homes.

Adams is seeking a second term even as he faces calls to resign by senior Democrats after he was indicted last year on corruption charges and then courted President Donald Trump as he seeks to get the indictment dismissed. Adams, 64, has pleaded not guilty.

Cuomo entered politics in the 1980s helping his father, Mario Cuomo, win three terms as New York governor, an office he himself won in 2010. He also served in President Bill Clinton's Cabinet as housing secretary, and, before becoming governor, served a term as New York's attorney general.

As governor, Cuomo signed bills legalizing same-sex marriage and recreational marijuana, and he oversaw an expansion of Penn Station and an overhaul of LaGuardia Airport.

He was known for making daily public briefings in the early days of the COVID pandemic, which killed thousands of New Yorkers, but his response to the crisis became the beginning of his political downfall.

In an audit, New York state's comptroller found Cuomo's administration had pressured the Health Department to deliberately undercount COVID deaths of state nursing home residents. Cuomo had signed a $5.1 million deal for a book about his leadership during the pandemic, but the state ethics board revoked its approval after saying Cuomo wrongly used state employees and resources to write it.

Idrees Ali and Phil Stewart
REUTERS

WASHINGTON – U.S. Army Lt. Gen. Telita Crosland, the head of the military's health agency and one of the most senior Black female officers in the Army, was forced to retire on Friday, two sources told Reuters.

The move comes just a week after President Donald Trump fired the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and other senior officers, in an unprecedented shakeup.

Although Crosland's retirement was publicly announced, Reuters is first to report that she was forced to end her 32-year military career.

On Friday, Stephen Ferrara, the acting assistant secretary of defense for health affairs, said that Crosland had started her retirement.

"I want to thank Crosland for her dedication to the nation, to the military health system, and to Army medicine for the past 32 years," Ferrara said in a statement.

But a current and former official, speaking on the condition of anonymity, said Crosland had been told that she must retire. She was not given a reason why, the officials said.

The Pentagon declined to say why Crosland retired and referred Reuters to the Defense Health Agency. The DHA did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth has moved quickly to eliminate diversity, equity and inclusion initiatives at the Pentagon, arguing that they are divisive.

Earlier this month, Hegseth said he thought that "diversity is our strength" was the "single dumbest phrase in military history."

Hegseth has also ended commemorations of identity month celebrations, such as Black History Month and Women's History Month.

Diversity, equity and inclusion programs seek to promote opportunities for women, ethnic minorities and other traditionally underrepresented groups. Civil rights advocates argue that such programs, generally backed by Democrats, are needed to address longstanding inequities and structural racism.

In an article posted on the health agency's website last year, Crosland downplayed her identity as a Black woman in the Army.

"I don't actually frame anything I do day-in and day-out in the terms of my race or my gender. That's always been a hard question for me to answer," she said. "It's not because I don't understand the responsibility – certainly, there are challenges that come from being a woman in the military, there are challenges that come from being African American, and being in the military."

CINCINNATI - Gail Franklin "Frank" Miller, a beloved member of the Clifton community, passed away on February 19, 2025, age 86, in Cincinnati, Ohio. Born on March 24, 1938, in Mansfield, Ohio, Frank was the cherished son of the late James and Dorothy Miller (nee Franklin). He was the loving husband of Carolyn Miller (nee Baker) and the beloved father of Geoffrey Miller and Bryan Miller.

Frank spent his formative years in the Clifton neighborhood of Cincinnati, where he developed a deep and abiding connection to the community. He was a proud 1956 graduate of Hughes High School where he loved playing his trombone in the marching and concert band.

Following high school, Frank attended Columbia University, where he earned his B.A. in Government. His time at Columbia was marked by his intellectual curiosity and dedication to his studies. He went on to further his education by attending the University of Michigan Law School, graduating with his Juris Doctor in 1963. Frank's keen attention to detail and passion for law led him to excel in Corporate and Real Estate law. He spent an impressive 44 years with Dinsmore & Shohl Law Firm. During his tenure, Frank was known for his integrity, expertise, and unwavering commitment to his clients.

On September 26, 1964, Frank married Carolyn Baker and together they created a life they cherished in their beloved Victorian house on Evanswood Place in Clifton where they lived for 58 years. Frank and Carolyn were blessed with two loving sons, Geoffrey and Bryan, five grandchildren, and five great-grandchildren. Frank was a steadfast and devoted father who encouraged his sons to excel in academics, music, and athletics, and who exemplified and inspired a civic-minded interest in history, politics, and current affairs.

Frank had a long history with Clifton Town Meeting and served in many positions including President over more than 25 years. He championed a Neighborhood Plan and historic preservation efforts for his beloved Clifton community and was instrumental in helping save the Esquire Theatre.

Frank was a collector and researcher at heart and assembled impressive collections of antiques, art, books, music albums, and stamps. He had a particular passion for streetcars and railroads, and over the years, read a vast number of books and visited numerous streetcar and railroad museums and tourist railroads, especially if they ran steam engines. He adored classic cars and his favorites were his 1949 Hudson Super Six sedan, 1972 Citroen D Special sedan, and his bright red 1988 Toyota MR2 coupe bought on his 50th birthday. Frank also loved genealogy and his family history research efforts for the Miller and Baker families were masterful and impressive. His enthusiasm for these hobbies was infectious, and he often shared his knowledge and passion with family and friends.

Frank loved to travel and was an expert trip planner, making sure to include plenty of historic and cultural sites and museums. As a young family with the boys they mostly travelled in North America. But Frank and Carolyn later enjoyed numerous trips abroad, often for a month at a time. Some of the most memorable were Yugoslavia, Australia, Taiwan, Japan and Turkey.

Frank was also an active and dedicated member and supporter of numerous cultural, arts, hobby, and civic organizations including: the Civil Air Patrol, Columbia University Alumni Club, Life Member of the Society for Hungarian Philately, Council of Ohio Antique Automobile Clubs, Hudson-Essex-Terraplane Club, Citroen Car Club, Clifton Town Meeting, Esquire Theatre Board, Clifton Cultural Arts Center, Cincinnati Preservation, CET, Cincinnati Public Radio (WGUC & WVXU), and for over 55 years enthusiastic subscriber to the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra.

Frank is survived by his devoted wife, Carolyn Miller (nee Baker); his loving sons, Geoffrey Miller (and his wife Diana Fleischman) and Bryan Miller; his dear grandchildren, Elisha Miller, Alexander Miller, Atalanta Arden-Miller, Vivian Miller, and Stella Miller; his great-grandchildren, Amira, Arielle, Josie, Jonah and Wilma Dean. He is also survived by numerous sisters -in-law, brothers-in-law, and nieces and nephews of the extended Baker Family who admired and loved him as he did them.

Frank's legacy is one of kindness, dedication, and love for his family and friends and community. He will be deeply missed by all who had the privilege of knowing him. His memory will live on in the hearts of those who loved him and in the many lives he touched.

A memorial service will be held on Saturday, March 8th at 3:00 PM at Spring Grove Funeral Homes, 4389 Spring Grove Avenue, Cincinnati, OH 45223. Following the service, the Miller family will host a reception in the Spring Grove Event Center from 4:00-6:00 PM.

Phaedra Trethan
USA TODAY

Many young kids are using technology more than ever for a variety of reasons and in a variety of ways. But a new study from Common Sense Media, a nonprofit that tracks media and technology and how it impacts children, suggests kids ages 8 and younger send significant time time online.

Common Sense completed similar studies in 2011, 2013, 2017 and 2020. The latest study, released on Wednesday, surveyed 1,578 parents of children age 8 or younger in August 2024.

The report looked not only at how much time younger children are spending on devices but also how they are spending that time.

Screen time has remained steady since 2020, according to the latest report, when the pandemic meant children and people of all ages were online for longer periods of time as some schools and workplaces closed for extended periods.

By age 2, most kids are spending about two and a half hours a day using technology. Five- to 8-year-old children spend an average of about three and a half hours a day looking at screens.

Children are watching more short videos online using platforms like TikTok and YouTube Shorts. That's increased from an average of 1 minute of daily viewing in 2020 to 14 minutes on average by 2024.

In addition, Common Sense found that children are playing games online far more than they had in the past. Gaming times have increased significantly – by 65% since 2020.

And kids aren't just powering on these devices once they've finished their homework or an afterschool sport. One in 5 children age 8 and younger use a mobile device for emotional regulation, at mealtime or to fall asleep, according to their parents.

Some parents (17%) said their child uses a mobile device to calm themselves when they feel angry, sad or upset. And about the same percentage of children (23% and 22%, respectively) use a digital device when eating at home or at a restaurant. Twenty percent of kids use a digital device to fall asleep every night or most nights, the study found.

Children are also getting their own tablets and phones. Common Sense found that by age 2, 40% of children had their own tablet, and 58% had their own tablet by age 4 (about the same as in 2020).

The number of children with their own cell phone by age 8 – 1 in 4 – has remained about the same as well. More than half of children under age 8 have their own phone or tablet (51%), which has also held steady since 2020.

Artificial intelligence, too, is making inroads with younger children, with about a third of parents saying their child has used AI for school-related learning.

‘Direct primary care’ reduces red tape

Jonny Williams
Providence Journal
USA TODAY NETWORK

“I was so burned out by corporate medicine, and I healed opening this practice,” said Dr. Wendy Regan, right, seen in her Jamestown office with patient Beth Babbitt. PHOTOS BY DAVID DELPOIO/ PROVIDENCE JOURNAL

JAMESTOWN, Rhode Island – Wendy Regan wanted to be a doctor since she was a child. Medicine, she quickly learned, ticked a lot of the boxes she was interested in.

And so, she went to medical school and in 2000 completed her residency as a family medicine doctor. She worked at smaller practices for the better part of the next two decades. Then things started going south when her practice was bought out by a larger provider.

In her old practice, Regan used to leave her first and last appointment slots open in case a patient called in sick the day before and needed to see her. Her new employer told her she couldn’t do that anymore.

Regan also had a panel load of 2,000 patients, which boiled down to a few minutes per visit, not enough time to assess a patient’s needs and treat them.

“That’s all disease management,” Regan said. “You’re not doing any preventive medicine in that short period of time. Basically, you’re just giving medications out all day because it’s the quickest, easiest way to make someone better.”

A few years before, Regan had heard of a different model of practicing medicine called direct primary care. Under that model, patients pay a subscription fee for their care directly to their provider. Direct primary care providers don’t take insurance, which removes a lot of the bureaucratic red tape that leads to physician burnout.

It was a step of faith – starting from scratch, stepping outside the standard model of delivering care – but Regan took it.

On a recent afternoon, Regan sat at her practice, which she opened in 2021 in Jamestown, Rhode Island, and reflected on her decision.

“I was so burned out by corporate medicine, and I healed opening this practice, by being able to help people the way I wanted to help people,” Regan said.

What is direct primary care?

The first thing to know about direct primary care is that it is a fairly new trend that has developed over the past three decades or so. According to DPC Mapper, there are nearly 2,500 direct primary care practices in the U.S.

The second thing is that direct primary care is not concierge medicine. Doctors who practice concierge medicine charge a subscription to access their services on top of charging a patient’s insurance. Direct primary care eschews insurance altogether.

In some ways, direct primary care is an effort to return to an older-fashioned way of delivering care, where doctor-patient interactions are not burdened by insurance red tape.

Many doctors today practice under a fee-for-service model, where providers are reimbursed by insurance companies for the services they provide. This model, however, has been criticized because it can incentivize providing services when not needed.

Traditional insurance-payer models can also get in the way of patients receiving health care services they need because the insurer has to approve them first. Prior authorization, the process doctors have to go through to get some services approved, has been linked to physician burnout.

Under direct primary care, doctors set their own rates. These vary by doctor and patient demographics – older patients with higher health complications pay a higher monthly fee – but on average it comes down to about the daily price of a cup of coffee (between $100 and $120 a month).

Lauren Hedde, who opened the first direct primary care practice in Rhode Island in 2014, says this model provides patients with pricing transparency.

“They know exactly what they’re paying and what to expect, and that there’s no hidden co-pays or co-insurance bills that they’re going to get after the visit,” Hedde said.

It also reduces overhead – expenses not directly related to patient care that usually force smaller practices to join larger health care corporations.

“Everything is membership-based,” Hedde said. “And that sort of allows us to remove the insurance billing entirely, which reduces our overhead by a lot and allows us to really focus on the patient care directly.”

Direct primary care patients enjoy benefits unheard of in most primary care offices: short to no wait times, longer visits, unlimited consultations, direct access to their providers via text or phone call and home checkups, to name a few.

Some also offer other services, such as body sculpting and discounts on medications, imaging services and lab work.

One of the secrets behind direct primary care’s benefits for patients and work-life balance for doctors is that it allows providers to retain a smaller panel load than if they were practicing in a fee-for-service model.

Francisco Gutierrez, who started SOLYMAR Direct Health in 2021, used to follow 2,500 patients when he was practicing in corporate medicine.

“That is one of the biggest frustrations that I had. I had learned a lot about how to help people ... and it was frustrating for me that I didn’t have the time,” Gutierrez said.

Now Gutierrez and Regan only see between 350 and 400 patients. Direct primary care providers see about a fourth to a fifth of the number of patients that most primary care providers in fee-for-service practices do.

This, however, does limit the number of patients who have access to direct primary care providers – and to primary care as a whole.

Hedde, Regan and Gutierrez see many benefits for doctors who practice under a direct primary care model. For one, their work stays in the office and they don’t have to bring it home with them.

They also make as much or more money than they did when they practiced in the fee-for-service model, despite having a fraction of the workload. The doctors, however, do have the ability to scale their work and take as many patients as they feel comfortable with.

WPI engineers employ origami in robotic arm

Jesse Collings
Worcester Telegram & Gazette
USA TODAY NETWORK

WPI Associate Professor Cagdas Onal uses lightweight materials and origami folding techniques to create a robotic arm with a full range of movement but which resists twisting. PROVIDED BY WPI

WORCESTER, Mass. – When someone envisions a robotic arm, they probably are thinking of a large, heavyweight tool used to assemble Ford pickups in Michigan. Or maybe they think of the do-it-all robotic arm from the Iron Man movies that assists Tony Stark in his mansion. Either way, it doesn’t seem a practical tool to use around the house.

Engineers at Worcester Polytechnic Institute are trying to change that, with a new robotic arm that has been inspired by the Japanese paper art of origami.

The lightweight arm is designed to help people with disabilities reach, grab and pull objects that otherwise would be out of reach within their home.

“The project started when we were discussing potential applications, and I thought if we could create a robotic arm that can bend in any location along its length, it could be safer and more adaptable with humans around,” said Cagdas Onal, an associate professor of robotics engineering at WPI.

The arm uses what are called “soft robotics,” which are robotics that use a soft, flexible and lightweight material for the parts, as opposed to more traditional robotics that use steel.

The arm is composed of lightweight plastics, 3D-printed components and off-the-shelf items such as sensors and cables, and can flex, collapse and expand based on what the user needs.

The challenge with soft robotics is that since they are made of light materials, they tend to be weaker and less precise than robotics made of more rigid materials. That has made soft robotics impractical for many uses, but engineers at WPI believe that they have great potential.

“Soft robots will likely never be as precise as a rigid robot,” said Gabrielle Conrad, a Ph.D student who has worked with Onal on the project. “The question is, do you always need it to be that precise given a particular application?”

Onal said that engineers have noticed how skilled origamists can make strong, rigid items entirely out of paper using advanced folding techniques. If they can make something strong out of paper, couldn’t that same technique be used to make stronger support out of lighter materials in robotics?

“This is something that we have been developing for about 10 years at WPI. If you make robotics out of a soft rubber or foam, it will be floppy, it will bend and it will bend in every direction,” Onal said. “With origami, we have all these existing designs (developed by the hobby) that will give you stiffness in some directions and softness in other directions.”

During a demonstration at WPI’s robotics lab, Conrad, who along with postdoctoral student Shou-Shan Chiang has been one of the key figures behind the project, said that the origami structure gives the arm a full range of movement while also preventing it from twisting – or injuring a user.

“The arm uses origami (structure) to create a bendable but torsionally stiff structure, and so this can change links, to move in all directions, but it is resistant to twisting,” Conrad said.

Trump, Musk aren’t first to doubt Fort Knox’s gold

The U.S. Bullion Depository is a huge vault at the military base in Fort Knox, Ky. JON CHERRY/GETTY IMAGES FILE

President Donald Trump said he’s going to check on the country’s supply of gold stored at the famously secure Fort Knox depository, in what would be an unusual glimpse into the vault not typically accessed by presidents or the public.

“If the gold isn’t there, we’re going to be very upset,” Trump said, as his adviser Elon Musk has stoked theories claiming the gold may have been taken.

“Who is confirming that gold wasn’t stolen from Fort Knox? Maybe it’s there, maybe it’s not. That gold is owned by the American public! We want to know if it’s still there,” Musk said in a post to his social media platform X last month.

The U.S. Bullion Depository, often just called Fort Knox, is a huge vault at the military base in Fort Knox, Kentucky. The U.S. Mint says it holds about half of the country’s gold and has only allowed a handful of visits from outsiders like politicians and journalists over its history.

Fort Knox is home to 147.3 million ounces, or 5,000 tons, of gold, according to the U.S. Mint. At current prices, the value could be in the hundreds of billions of dollars.

The Mint is aware that some people have been skeptical of a secretive, inaccessible location storing vast amounts of gold. High-profile visits have been orchestrated before to address the public’s concerns, according to the Mint’s website.

“The Treasury Secretary allows the visit when rumors persist that all the gold had been removed from the vaults,” it said of a 1974 visit.

Sen. Rand Paul of Kentucky is among those calling for an audit, saying in a letter to Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent that a “formal audit” hasn’t happened since 1974. But Bessent, appointed by Trump, said a report from Sept. 30 showed the gold was all accounted for.

“We do an audit every year,” Bessent told Bloomberg TV. “All the gold is there.”

Fort Knox has also held historical artifacts including President Abraham Lincoln’s Gettysburg Address, the Declaration of Independence, Constitution and Bill of Rights during World War II for safekeeping.

The vault was built in 1936 with 16,000 cubic feet of granite, 4,200 cubic yards of concrete, 750 tons of reinforcing steel and 670 tons of structural steel. Fort Knox received the first gold in its depository in 1937.

Small amounts of gold do leave the vault to be tested for purity “during regularly scheduled audits,” according to the U.S. Mint.

But “except for these samples, no gold has been transferred to or from the Depository for many years,” the Mint’s website says.

In fact, according to the Mint, the structure and content of the vault is only known by a few people, and no one person has all the information needed to open it.

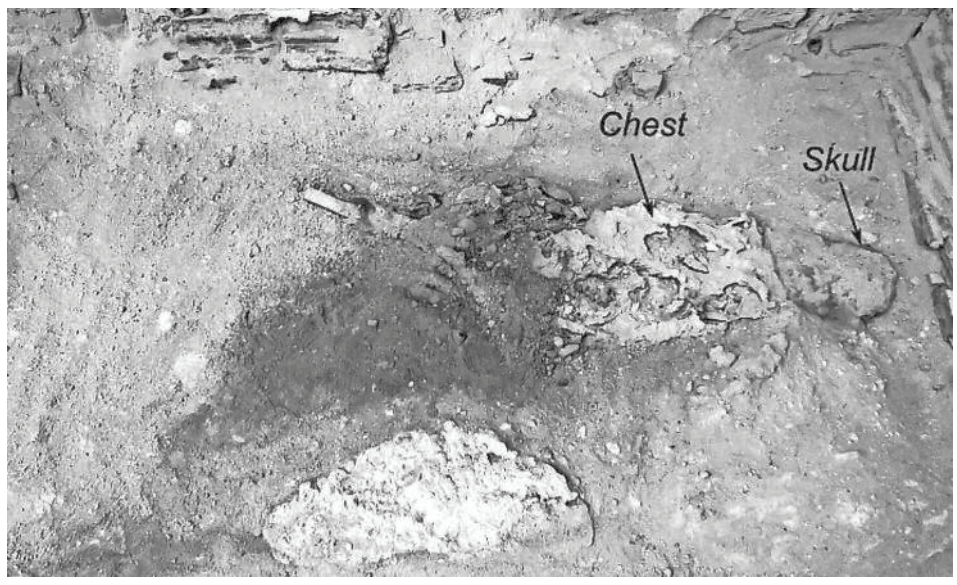

Former Kentucky Gov. Matt Bevin, who got to see inside the vault in 2017, said in a radio interview during that time that it took “quite a bit of time” to access it, the Associated Press reported.

“All I will say is that it is freakishly well secured,” Bevin said. “The gold is safe.”

Volcanic eruption turned brain to glass

Researcher: Fast heating followed by fast cooling created conditions

Elizabeth Weise
USA TODAY

Scientists found black shards in the skull of a young man who died in 79AD in the town of Herculaneum when Mount Vesuvius erupted. The shards are his brain matter preserved as glass. PROVIDED BY GUIDO GIORDANO/UNIVERSITÀ ROMA TRE

Archaeologists have previously discovered human brains preserved in a variety of ways, including drying, freezing and tanning. Some preserved brains even resemble soap.

But now they've found something new: a brain that turned into glass.

In a paper published on Thursday in the journal Scientific Reports, archaeologists and volcanologists show that the shards of black glass found in the skull of a young man who died when Mount Vesuvius erupted in 79 AD are in fact his vitrified brain.

"This is totally counterintuitive," said Guido Giordano, a volcanologist at the Roma Tre University, a public research university in Rome.

"Under normal conditions, you cannot vitrify any organic tissue unless you drop it to well below zero very quickly. But then when it returns to ambient temperature, it reverts," he said.

But after doing extensive testing on the black material, they were able to conclusively prove it was vitrified tissue – the man's brain and parts of his spinal cord had turned into glass.

How did this man's brain turn to glass?

In 79 AD, Italy's Mount Vesuvius erupted, utterly destroying the towns of Pompeii and Herculaneum over the course of two days.

On the first day of the eruption, Pompeii was covered in ash and falling debris, but nearby Herculaneum got only a light dusting with ash.

"The first few hours of the eruption of Vesuvius were scary enough to cause most of the people in Herculaneum to flee and search for rescue by the city harbor," Giordano said. "But during the night, the first pyroclastic flow was ejected from the volcano, a turbulent mix of ash, pumice and super hot gasses, and hit Herculaneum."

Most of the people were at the seashore when the first pyroclastic flow arrived, because they were likely waiting for rescue. They died when the roiling cloud of hot ash hit.

But inside the Collegium Augustalium, a young man of about 20 years was lying in his wooden bed. The Collegium, located on the city's main street, was a public building dedicated to the worship of Emperor Augustus.

What happened next, as conjectured by the scientists, is as dreadful as it is fascinating.

The ash cloud burst out of Mount Vesuvius was, at its core, hot, heavy and deadly.

"It's like a landslide. That material is able to knock down houses," Giordano said.

But at the cloud's edges, things are different. It was a deadly haze of superheated gray ash that billowed through the nearly empty town, reaching temperatures of between 1,000 and 1,100 degrees.

It was similar to the ash cloud from the 2018 eruption of Volcán de Fuego in Guatemala, which killed hundreds of people.

"In Herculaneum, this ash cloud engulfed the city, hot enough to kill people and raise the temperature of their bodies to between 930 and 1,100 degrees Fahrenheit," Giordano said.

The young man would have died instantly. But what happened to his brain was remarkable.

Almost as soon as it swept through the town, the cloud dissipated. Modern examples of such clouds can disappear within minutes. In Herculaneum, it left only a thin layer of ash on the body and in the room, less than one inch.

The temperatures inside of the ash cloud would have been expected to burn up the body and destroy all soft tissues. But it came and went so rapidly that there wasn't time. Instead, scientists believe, the body very quickly cooled back down to the ambient evening air temperature.

"It needed to have first a rise in temperature well above 950 degrees Fahrenheit, an event that is very fast and then very fast cooling," he said. This caused his brain to turn into glass during the cooling, locking in its structure.

"Inside the skull, there were all these black, shiny fragments," Giordano said. "They look like chips of obsidian, black, shiny and spiky."

Some time later, the next wave of pyroclastic flow reached Herculaneum and the entire town was entombed in as much as 60 feet of ash and debris from the volcano.

While the young man's body was initially excavated several years ago, archaeologists weren't sure exactly what was in the skull. By testing fragments of what was found, they were able to prove that it was brain tissue and that it was glass.

Many brains found preserved in archaeological record

Given how delicate they are, preserved brains are not as uncommon as might be expected in the archaeological record.

A study published in March of last year by scientists at Oxford University found 4,405 examples of human brains being preserved, some of which were more than 12,000 years old. They included brains from Egyptian and Korean royalty, British and Scandinavian monks, Arctic explorers and a large number of bodies from the Middle Ages that were removed from the largest cemetery in Paris before the French Revolution.

Those scientists found five types of brain preservation:

- Dehydration (often in desert climates)
- Freezing (Arctic explorers and some freeze-dried mummies, especially in the Andes)
- Tanning (bodies preserved in acidic, tannin-filled bogs)
- Saponification (sometimes called "grave wax," this is when the fats in the brain turn to a soap-like clump)
- An unknown process, often found as some brain soft tissue preserved among otherwise skeletal remains, commonly in the presence of clay and iron

Scientists alarmed by fires spreading in urban areas

MATT MCKNIGHT/REUTERS

MISSOULA, Mont. – Scientists at a federal laboratory in Montana that has focused on fire for decades are increasingly concerned about wildfires that spread to population centers as Americans build communities ever closer to forests.

Mark Finney, senior scientist at the U.S. Forest Service's Missoula Fire Sciences Laboratory, noted a pattern in January fires in California – which killed dozens of people and destroyed thousands of homes – and recent fires elsewhere.

"They start in a nearby wildland vegetation, find fuel material where it ignites and spreads very rapidly and under very dry and windy conditions. It spreads quickly from a wildland situation into a more urban situation," he said during a tour for Reuters of his lab in late January.

Finney and his team set fires in a controlled environment for study and modeling. What they learn from such experiments about, for example, how far and fast fires can move is shared across the country and the world to help wildland fire managers make decisions when responding to fires.

Finney's was one of three labs founded in the years after a 1949 fire in a remote area of the Helena National Forest in Montana killed 13 firefighters. The goal was to better understand how fire behaves to avoid such tragedies. Over the decades, one of the other labs, in California, has shifted focus to soil research and other areas. The third, in Georgia, closed in 1989.

"This is really the last lab left devoted to studying wildland fire behavior," Finney said. "It is kind of an irony that we rely more on fire science now than we ever had. We have bigger and bigger questions and more consequences to society, our ecosystems and our communities from fire, and yet we have less and less resources to devote to scientific study of the subject."

Work at the lab also has helped researchers identify areas of extreme wildfire risk in California and elsewhere, information the U.S. Forest Service makes available to the public.

Communities in areas where wildfire risk is high can apply for funds to use to help brace for disaster under the federal Community Wildfire Defense Grant Program that was part of a $1 trillion, five-year bipartisan infrastructure law that then-President Joe Biden signed in 2021.

"I think what's important about those kind of programs is that, you know, some of the larger communities that maybe have the financial resources and the staffing to implement wildfire planning and mitigation work are getting that work done without that additional funding," said Greg Dillon, who directs the Missoula lab's Fire Modeling Institute.

"But it's a lot of the rural communities where the wildfire risk is, is really high, but they just simply don't have the local capacity and resources to get that mitigation work done," Dillon added.

Since taking office in January, President Donald Trump has halted federal funding for programs to reduce wildfire risk as part of broad cuts to government spending, according to organizations impacted by the moves.

The Forest Service said in a February 24 email to Reuters that the Community Wildfire Defense Grant Program's funding has continued and the deadline for applying for the grants has been extended by two weeks until March 14.

African rainforests were home to early humans

Study indicates habitation as early as 150,000 years ago

A new study found some of our ancestors may have managed to survive in a tropical rainforest in West Africa much earlier than was previously known. A team of researchers found evidence that humans were living at a site in southern Ivory Coast, a region of present-day rainforest, about 150,000 years ago in an environment generally believed to be a barrier to human occupation, according to the study published on February 26 in Nature.

"Before our study, the oldest secure evidence for habitation in African rainforests was around 18,000 years ago, and the oldest evidence of rainforest habitation anywhere came from southeast Asia at about 70,000 years ago," study author and archaeologist Eslem Ben Arous of Spain's National Centre for Human Evolution Research, said in a statement.

Though its widely believed that humans first originated about 300,000 years ago from one part of Africa, we understand very little about the continent's history, according to Eleanor Scerri, leader of the Human Palaeosystems research group at the Max Planck Institute of Geoanthropology and a co-author of the new study.

As the evidence of early humans living in Asian rainforests emerged, she began investigating the possibility the same phenomenon had occurred in West Africa.

Finding evidence of this theory presented a challenge, Scerri said, because the preservation of ancient botanical materials is notoriously poor in rainforests, and Africa's rainforests see so little rainfall it's possible they may not have been considered rainforests thousands of years ago.

As she began her research, Scerri came across a decades-old book written in Russian about a deeply buried site next to a river in Ivory Coast.

But when the site was first uncovered in 1982 by a joint Ivorian-Soviet expedition led by archaeologist professor Yodé Guédé of the Université Félix Houphouët-Boigny, the team didn't have the tools to determine the age of the stone tools they found or what the environment was like when people lived there. The research was strong, but Scerri said "because it was published in Russian and because it was West Africa, no one was interested, and no one knew about it."

So Scerri and her colleagues tracked down Guédé who, now in his 80s, guided them back to the vast trench. The team managed to cut back the vegetation and collect samples in March 2020 before they had to leave the country because of the COVID-19 pandemic and they were able to return briefly before the site was ultimately destroyed by quarrying.

Scerri said the team is still working to examine sediment samples and stone tools taken from a site near the trench and more exploration of West Africa needs to be done to understand these artifacts. She said the findings challenge the longstanding narrative that we "had to learn how to overcome different ecosystems as we sort of grew up as humans."

Flight canceled for wheelchair users

Plane unable to transport wheelchair rugby players

USA TODAY

At the end of a wheelchair rugby tournament, Ryan Major was ready to get home. But instead of a smooth journey back, a series of operational issues hit his flight and delayed his return.

"This is by far the worst experience traveling I've had. I've never had to resort to sleeping at the airport to get a continuation the next day," he told USA TODAY.

Major was traveling home from the Paralyzed Veterans of America Wheelchair Rugby Invitational in Louisville, Kentucky, on Feb. 16 when things started to go wrong.

According to Major, as well as Noah Currier and Seth McBride – fellow competitors on the same United Airlines flight to Chicago – there were at least 20 wheelchair users on their flight, which was ultimately canceled due to a series of compounding events including bad weather, a broken deicing machine at the airport and, eventually, the crew timing out.

"I had no idea that there were going to be 20 other wheelchair users on that flight. When we got to the gate, we saw all these wheelchairs and we were like, 'Oh boy, they're going to need a lot of support here,' " Currier said.

He added that one of the big problems seemed to be that there was no way for everyone to let the airport or airline know in advance that they would require extra assistance.

Currier said that if you book through a third-party website, there may not be a field to request special assistance. Even if you do book directly through the airline, he said, a disabled traveler's ground assistance needs aren't always properly communicated to the various contractors at the airport.

"Nobody was aware of how many chairs were going to be on each flight. That becomes an issue for planning purposes," Currier said. "When we asked to have multiple aisle chairs, they would call up and you could watch them doing it. But then only one aisle chair showed up."

Seth McBride said it took over an hour on one flight to deplane all the passengers who required assistance. PROVIDED BY SETH MCBRIDE

As the delays were extended and the flight was eventually canceled, all three competitors said they had to get on and off the plane multiple times, which is dangerous and especially time-consuming for passengers who rely on wheelchairs because ground staff needs to individually assist each person with the transfer.

"For wheelchair users getting on an aisle chair is always a terrible experience, they're horrible for your body," McBride said. "I have a minor pressure sore on my coccyx and I'm sure it's from the aisle chair and all of the transfers."

At least one of the times, McBride said, it took over an hour to deplane all the passengers who required assistance, because there were a limited number of aisle chairs available for use.

United Airlines acknowledged the incident.

"This wasn't the kind of experience we want to provide for our customers. On February 16, severe weather in Louisville led to the cancellation of United flight 3640 to Chicago O'Hare. We reached out individually to each customer and shared updates on the status of their wheelchairs, the ways in which we'd reunite them with their belongings and offer compensation," Charles Hobart, a United spokesperson, said in a statement to USA TODAY. "We have since reunited the customers with their baggage and chairs."

While all three passengers acknowledged they got their wheelchairs back undamaged within the required time, they said the airline should still be doing more to accommodate travelers with disabilities.

"This is a learning moment, and I think that we need to be a part of that solution, whether it's disabled passengers or nonprofits advocating for people with disabilities," Currier said.

United Airlines has a preexisting partnership with the United Spinal Association. McBride works for the organization and said advocates have been clear about what's needed.

"We know it's better training [for] airline staff and gate workers," he told USA TODAY. "It's about airlines being held accountable with fines and things like that when this happens. It's about airlines treating us like humans."

The Department of Transportation tracks monthly statistics of airlines damaging wheelchairs and other mobility devices, and while advocates say that is a huge problem, it's not the only one facing mobility-impaired travelers or those with other disabilities.

"Injury to the body, that is because of all of these transfers and movements, and that is just as problematic," Heather Ansley, chief policy officer at Paralyzed Veterans of America, told USA TODAY. "There's no list of 'here are all the individuals we injured just in the process of getting on and off an aircraft.' That's the unseen statistics here of people trying to travel by air."

Alex Bennewith, vice president of government relations at the United Spinal Association, agreed.

"I see flashing red lights everywhere. I'm glad that more serious adverse events did not occur, but I know the entire team will be submitting their complaints to both United Airlines and to DOT," she said in a statement.

And while some improvements to traveler protections were recently enacted by the DOT, many are worried that they may not be here to stay.

Major U.S. airlines said they are challenging the DOT's rule increasing penalties for damaged or lost mobility devices, arguing that the rule's definition of discrimination is too broad and that some situations, like turbulence damaging a wheelchair, are beyond their control.

"It felt like some progress was finally being made and with everything that's happening right now it feels like it's trying to be clawed back," McBride said.

One way taxpayers must gain more control of Paycor Stadium

Jason Williams
Columnist
Cincinnati Enquirer
USA TODAY NETWORK

Subject: More concerts, non-Bengals sporting events at Paycor Stadium

Message: I read with interest in The Enquirer about the new Nissan Stadium being built in Nashville and some of the events scheduled there in the future. I toured the Superdome years ago and learned that it hosts over 300 events annually. How about this: Give Bengals owner Mike Brown everything he wants (he'll get it anyway). In exchange, gain control of stadium use. Instead of 12-13 events annually (Bengals games and the music festival), hold concerts, play high school and college games, etc.

Reply: This is a critical part of the next lease for Hamilton County.

The Bengals must not be allowed to have full control of the stadium year-round like they do in the current lease. To me, a Hamilton County resident and taxpayer, it's one of four major sticking points in new stadium lease negotiations – with the others being making sure the Bengals/NFL/private sector ponies up at least 40% (and ideally half) of the money to cover stadium upgrades, the team building its own headquarters/practice facility and the creation of a stadium authority.

We all know the county is going to cave in the end and continue to give the Bengals their full cut of the sales-tax money in perpetuity beyond the stadium debt being paid off in 2032. We all know the state is going to come through with one-off sources of capital-budget money to help with upgrading the stadium. But the county must start calling the shots on its facility, something commissioner Alicia Reece has been preaching. It's utterly ridiculous that there aren't more concerts and other non-Bengals sporting events held at Paycor Stadium 8-9 months of the year. After all, taxpayers covered 94% of the original stadium construction cost and continue to pay almost all of the bills for maintenance and upgrades.

The Bengals need to follow almost every other NFL franchise's lead and build their own headquarters, where the on- and off-the-field daily operations can be conducted. This would require the Bengals to spend around $250 million to $300 million – and perhaps even half-billion depending on land cost – to build a corporate headquarters and practice facility.

They could use that facility to make money by developing the surrounding land and renting it out for high school games and concerts. But of course, that would require the Bengals to put a lot of their own money into a facility. And having all their operations inside Paycor Stadium is part of the Bengals' money-making calculation.

USA TODAY Sports Men's Coaches Poll

Feb. 24

The USA TODAY Sports Men's Basketball Coaches Poll is conducted weekly throughout the regular season using a panel of head coaches at Division I schools. The panel is chosen in consultation with the National Association of Basketball Coaches. The voters represent each of the 32 Division I conferences that receive an automatic bid to the NCAA tournament. Each coach submits a Top 25 with a first-place vote worth 25 points, second place 24, and so on down to one point for 25th, with first-place votes in parenthesis.

Scott Springer
USA TODAY NETWORK

With University of Cincinnati Bearcats spring football starting around the corner on Monday, March 10, head coach Scott Satterfield and defensive coordinator Tyson Veidt previewed the upcoming months along with new secondary coach hires Adam Braithwaite and Eddie Hicks.

UC will kickstart 2025 with 15 transfer portal additions and 13 players from the high school ranks. Their spring work will culminate with a Spring Week Showcase open practice/scrimmage on Saturday, April 12 at noon.

Head coach Scott Satterfield

Since shortly after the first of the year, Director of Football Performance Niko Palazeti has been running the Bearcats through grueling work trying to get them ready for spring and beyond.

Satterfield says it's not surprising to hear transfers say it's the toughest work they've done and they hope it pays off soon.

As for the spring events, many schools have eliminated the spring game altogether, much of that due to the poaching of players that has become familiar with big money football.

"Some of these coaches are a little worried about what they put out in the spring game," Satterfield said.

The reasons involve other teams scouting your talent and the chances of losing someone that has a successful game in front of fans or on video.

The unfortunate truth is a spring portal exists beginning April 16 through April 25. It's not unusual for more roster movement post-spring practice.

"There will be some turnover," Satterfield said of the current state of the game.

"Teams go through the spring practice and say, 'Where's our weakest spot? Maybe we need to try to go get some help.' I don't think many guys will get in the portal in the spring, most got in the portal in winter time. There will be more turnover, but maybe not as much."

Satterfield promises the April 12 practice will have some scrimmaging, special teams, 7-on-7 and some 11-on-11 work. Autographs and fan engagement will still be a part of the day with the players and coaches.

Among transfers for fans to watch are 5-foot-9, 218-pound running back Tawee Walker who has been a successful runner at Wisconsin and Oklahoma and drawn comparisons to Corey Kiner, who completed his eligibility last season.

"They have great size, great strength," Satterfield said.

"Tawee's just as strong if not stronger. We've had some competitions just in the last week and he's really stepped up. That's what you want to see. This is just a little glimpse of what he's built like. He's been one that's stood out in that regard."

Satterfield also mentioned Coastal Carolina cornerback Matthew McDoom, kicker Stephen Rusnak from Charlotte, wide receiver Jeff Caldwell from Lindenwood, receiver Cyrus Allen from Texas A&M and safety Xavier Williams from Middle Tennessee State.

"I'm anxious to see them when we put the ball down," Satterfield said.

Defensive coordinator Tyson Veidt

Veidt has several key veteran returners to the 3-3-5 defense like Dontay Corleone, Jack Dingle, Jake Golday and Jonathan Thompson but also has a bevy of young Bearcats that saw time immediately last season like Jiquan Sanks, Simeon Coleman, Montay Weedon, Marquavious Saboor and Marquaze Parker.

"Those first-year guys for us coming right out of high school gave us valuable reps, whether it was a defensive or special teams rep," Veidt said. "Those guys are a year older, a year stronger and a year seasoned. That's a huge thing for them."

With UC's new coaching additions, Veidt is now freed up to focus more on being defensive coordinator, while also looking at safeties. New hire Adam Braithwaite now is safety-specific and Josh Runda is an assistant safeties coach.

"That has helped me a little bit as we try to plan out how we're utilizing everybody in the springtime," Veidt said.

Adam Braithwaite, assistant coach/safeties

Braithwaite has also worked with new corners coach Eddie Hicks, and running backs coach Sean Dawkins.

"I've been a coordinator mostly at the FCS level, the opportunity to take a jump and get back into Power Four level was an opportunity I'd hoped would present itself," Braithwaite said.

"It just so happened to be with someone I've known. I'm excited about seeing a new way of doing things. This will be my first go-round in this defensive scheme. Right now, I'm a sponge. I'm learning the way things are done."

Braithwaite likes what he sees of the Big 12 Bearcats with their high work capacity.

Being back at this level, he's noticed the depth in the trenches and the physicality difference from FCS to FBS.

Eddie Hicks, assistant coach/cornerbacks

Hicks comes to the Bearcats from LSU where he was a senior defensive analyst for former Bearcats coach Brian Kelly.

He has been to Nippert Stadium before serving as a grad assistant in 2013 for UC during Tommy Tuberville's opening season.

"The process of getting back has been awesome," Hicks said of returning to Cincinnati.

"There's a lot of familiar faces. Nippert, the press box side is obviously bigger. I just remember Nippert being packed, the fans being inside it being loud. I'm looking forward to seeing that again."

He's also looking forward to being on the same page as a staff as they enter spring.

"Not just being on the same page, being on the same page in the same book," Hicks said.

UC spring football schedule

After the April 12 Spring Week Showcase open practice/scrimmage, UC will have two more practices to finish with their allowed 15 workouts.

The spring football transfer window then starts April 16 and runs for nine days as teams in 2025 make inevitable adjustments.

Big 12 football media days are July 8-9 in Frisco, Texas at The Star practice facility and Dallas Cowboys World Headquarters.

The Nippert Stadium opener is Sept. 6 vs. Bowling Green and UC opens Big 12 play Saturday, Sept. 27 on the road against the Kansas Jayhawks.

UC coach Scott Satterfield will oversee spring football practice beginning on March 10 through mid-April, including revamped festivities around the annual spring game.

GOODYEAR, Arizona – With all due respect to the esteemed commissioner of baseball, Cincinnati Reds manager Terry Francona couldn't (expletive) disagree more when it comes to the continued banishment of Pete Rose from the game even after his death.

"It's a shame now, because if they do it now, it'll look –."

Francona doesn't finish the obvious end to that sentence as he talks about the possibility of MLB ever removing Rose from the permanently ineligible list.

"I'm glad I don't have to make that decision," Francona says.

Rose was banned in 1989 for gambling on baseball as the manager of the Reds in the 1980s.

And five months after Rose's death, commissioner Rob Manfred's hardline position on the issue seems to remain unchanged.

When asked by the Enquirer whether Rose's death creates any potential mitigating factors that could lead to at least re-opening a discussion about lifting the ban, Manfred wanted no part of the topic this week.

"I'm not going to comment on Pete Rose right now," he said. "Not right now."

Turns out they're waiting a lot longer than that.

That's a hard pill to swallow for a lot of fans who watched him play, especially in this new age of MLB climbing in bed with the gambling industry to the extent that FanDuel Sports is the newly rebranded home of Reds telecasts, and Wrigley Field is now home to a brick-and-mortar sports book built into the Addison/Sheffield corner of the building.

"I have no ability to not be biased," Francona says. "I played with him. I played for him. I know what he did, but I (freaking) love the guy."

The Reds plan to honor Rose with a No. 14 sleeve patch on their uniforms this year and a pregame ceremony May 14 at Great American Ball Park.

There might not be much more than that anytime soon for Rose, given MLB's stance and the fact the ineligible list also makes him ineligible for the Hall of Fame.

"If he's not in the Hall of Fame, there isn't one," says Francona, who's headed to Cooperstown one day as a manager.

For Francona, the Rose issue is more personal than for most.

"As a young player, he was the best teammate," Francona says. "In '84, Bill Virdon's the manager (in Montreal). We get (Rose), and he sat with me and (young infielder Tim) Wallach on the plane. We'd play cards. I learned more from playing cards with Pete on the plane than I did from a lot of people."

But what stands out more to this day for Francona than the baseball mentorship was a moment in June that season.

"I get called into the manager's office, and I'm like, 'Damn, what the (heck) did I do?' I'm hitting about .360," says Francona, the Expos starting first baseman that year. "Pete's in there. And Bill says, 'Hey, look, Pete can't play left field. We need to try to move him to first.'

"I said, 'OK, (shoot), I don't care. I'll go out there.'

"I got hurt the next day."

Francona blew out his left knee trying to elude a tag, almost exactly two years to the day after he blew out his right knee in the field.

He was hitting .346 at the time and might have been an All-Star candidate but didn't play again that year.

"Saturday night I got hurt, and Pete's at the hospital at 6:30 in the morning," Francona says. "He felt terrible. Those are the things people don't see. I (freaking) love the guy."

It was enough of a mutual feeling that three years later – even as Francona's knees had reduced him to a platoon player – Rose brought him to Cincinnati, where Francona hit .227 in 102 games for his manager/mentor.

"I played so bad," Francona says, "and it crushed me. Because I felt like I let him down. He brought me in as a non-roster guy, I made the team, and I stunk. It was awful.

"I revered him."

REDS COMMENTARY: WILLIAMS AND WITTENMYER

Tito's right manager, but did Reds add right players?

Jason Williams
and Gordon Wittenmyer

GOODYEAR, Arizona – Team Enquirer is at Spring Training, and Reds beat reporter Gordon Wittenmyer and columnist Jason Williams are calling it like they're seeing it. As they sat watching the Reds workout earlier this week, they debated whether the club did enough to help new manager Terry Francona make the playoffs this season.

Wittenmyer: Good to see you in Reds camp this week. What do you think of the new vibe and team culture everybody's talking about around here?

Williams: Screw your vibe, man. Go to any big league camp and they'll talk about good vibes. No one cares, especially Reds fans. They're tired of hearing about vibes, chemistry, culture, energy, positivity. Just win games.

Wittenmyer: Damn, who spit in your Cheerios this morning?

Williams: You know what I'm saying, right? Tito Francona is here. He cares as much about vibes as the fans do. Winning is all that matters, and if they've got good enough players to do it. We heard about good vibes last year. And the year before. And the year before that. And what has that gotten the Reds? Thirty years, man. 1995. That's the last time the Reds won a playoff series. So I'm sorry if I'm not interested in vibes.

Wittenmyer: Dude, it's warm and sunny every day down here. Why are you getting so mad? You're starting to harsh my vibes. And you know nobody wants any part of my vibes. But I see what you're saying. What we can agree on is that the Reds' so-called vibes will only take them as far as their talent will.

Williams: Yep, we learned that the last two years, didn't we?

Wittenmyer: Exactly. So now that you've been here a week, the question becomes did they do enough in the offseason? Do they have enough talent?

Williams: Francona is a great start. But even he would tell you, a manager is only as good as his players. I strongly believe they have enough talent to win the NL Central. The difference is going to come down to pitching and Francona cleaning up the sloppiness we saw last year.

Wittenmyer: They've definitely got enough pitching, especially after adding Brady Singer in that Jonathan India trade. But I'm not sure they did enough to score anymore runs than they did last year or prevent anymore than they gave up with their gloves.

Williams: Give the front office credit for squeezing everything they could out of a slight increase in the payroll budget. Gavin Lux, Austin Hays and Jose Trevino. Lux won a World Series a few months ago. Hays and Trevino have been All-Stars in recent seasons. Taylor Rogers and Scott Barlow have both been closers. Those are all nice pickups.

Wittenmyer: None of them are Kyle Tucker. The Reds have to beat the Cubs this year, and the Cubs brought in the best player anybody in the division added to their roster this winter. The Cubs also were in on All-Star third baseman Alex Bregman, All-Star closer Tanner Scott, and just Tuesday, they brought in Justin Turner when their rookie third baseman got hurt. The Cubs are taking this division seriously this year. And in case you forgot, they finished two spots higher in the standings than the Reds did last year.

Wittenmyer: Look, the Reds did a nice job within their budget, and the Francona hire is huge. But it just feels like they left themselves a little short this winter.

Williams: You're dismissing the core of this franchise and the next step it should be ready to take. This team is built around Elly De La Cruz, Matt McLain and the rotation – and now is their time.

Wittenmyer: Time? McLain has been on the field for three months of Major League Baseball in the last two seasons. He's got a lot of talent. All I'm saying is it feels like they should have done more this winter for all this talk of urgency and winning now.

Williams: What more could Nick Krall's front office have done? I already told you all the guys they added. Those are quality veterans who complement the core.

Wittenmyer: I don't think you're following me, but what else is new? The front office did everything it could do. Francona and his new coaching staff are doing everything they can do. Even a lot of the players clearly have done a lot in the offseason based on how they look this spring. I'm talking about ownership, which went half in at a time this team should be all in.

Williams: Now you're starting to sound like a fanboy. When are you going to understand the plan? The days of spending on some big, splashy free agent are over. This isn't the Yankees. By the way, did you see how stupid the prices were this offseason?

Wittenmyer: Screw your plan. You don't need to be the Yankees. You don't need to be the Dodgers. What you need is a clue. Impact players were taking short-term deals all winter. If ownership had added even $40 million for one year to one of the lower payroll budgets in the game, then maybe Bregman is at third base for the Reds on Opening Day. He took a short-term deal with an opt-out clause with the Red Sox to put up numbers and go back into free agency. Imagine the numbers he could put up at Great American Ball Park. Then who's the division favorite?

Williams: Then what happens if you're Jeimer Candelario or Gavin Lux? I mean, where you gonna go?

Wittenmyer: Now you get it.

AUTO RACING NASCAR CUP SERIES

COTA's new layout sets up well for a few drivers

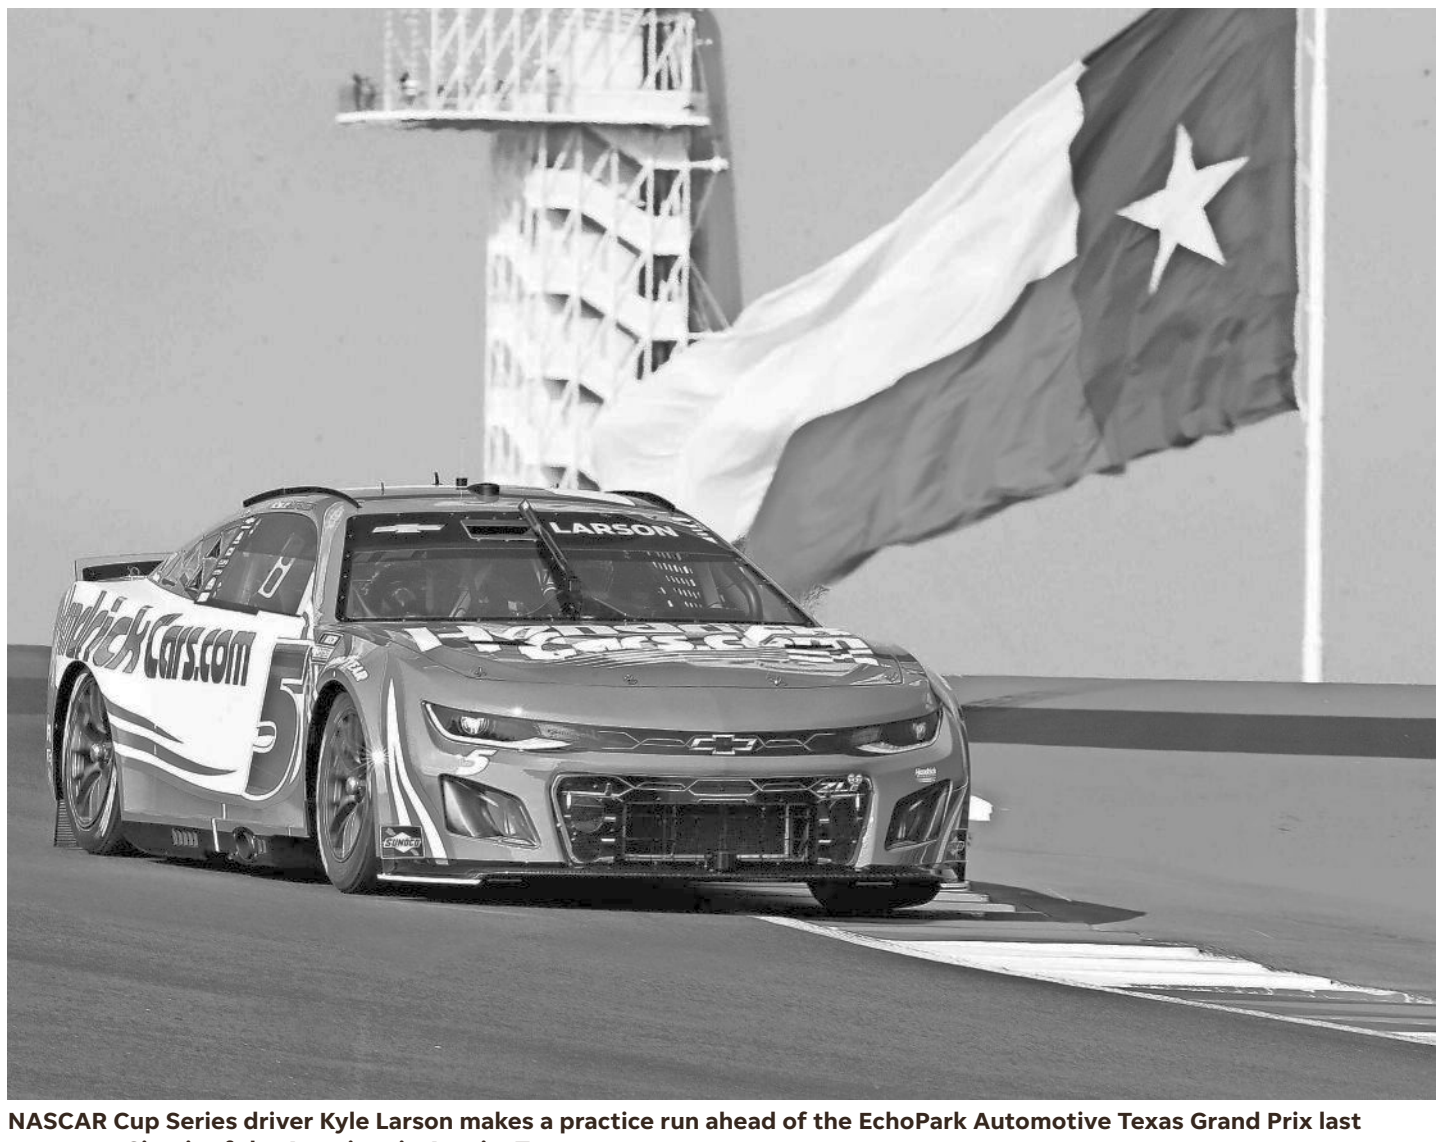

Samuel Stubbs
Field Level Media

When the NASCAR Cup Series races at Circuit of the Americas (COTA) this Sunday in Austin, Texas, the road course will look different than in years past.

That's because NASCAR has chosen to utilize COTA's shorter, "National" layout for this year's Xfinity Series and Cup Series races at the Texas road course. The National course's 20-turn layout is 2.3 miles in length, compared to the Full Course layout's length of 3.41 miles.

The change will bring the length of Sunday's EchoPark Automotive Grand Prix (3:30 p.m. ET, FOX) from 68 laps to 95, and bring the length of Saturday's Focused Health 250 (2:30 p.m. ET, CW) from 50 laps to 65.

The change in course layout, of course, will affect the drivers. Ahead of Sunday's race, here are the drivers that the new COTA layout – and the trip to COTA in general – will benefit the most.

NASCAR Cup Series driver Kyle Larson makes a practice run ahead of the EchoPark Automotive Texas Grand Prix last season at Circuit of the Americas in Austin, Texas. MICHAEL C. JOHNSON/USA TODAY SPORTS

Kyle Larson, No. 5 Chevrolet, Hendrick Motorsports

COTA's National course doesn't explicitly mirror any other road course on the schedule, which could make Larson a favorite to win on Sunday. Since joining Hendrick, Larson has become an elite road racer, boasting two wins apiece at Sonoma, Watkins Glen and the Charlotte Roval. The high-speed frontstretch and faster portions of the track lean more towards Watkins Glen, while the slower, tighter and more technical portions of the circuit more closely mirror Sonoma and the Charlotte Roval, where Larson won last October. Larson's ability to win at various styles of road courses should play right into his hands on Sunday.

Connor Zilisch, No. 87 Chevrolet, Trackhouse Racing

Zilisch is making his Cup Series debut on Sunday, but he'll have the benefit of running Saturday's Xfinity Series race beforehand. As a road course ace, Zilisch will be one of the favorites in the Xfinity race, and he has a chance to turn heads the following day as well. His resume includes wins in the 12 Hours of Sebring and the Rolex 24 at Daytona, as well as an Xfinity Series win at Watkins Glen in his debut. A year ago at COTA, Zilisch won the pole for the Truck race and earned a fourth-place finish. Regardless of layout, Zilisch will almost always be a force on road courses.

Shane van Gisbergen, No. 88 Chevrolet, Trackhouse Racing

The same can be said for Zilisch's teammate in van Gisbergen, who is well-suited to compete at any road course NASCAR travels to. The New Zealand native showed he can win at any road course on the schedule when he captured the checkered flag in his Cup Series debut at the Chicago Street Course in 2023. His ability to learn on the fly will come in handy as he experiences the new COTA layout for the first time along with the rest of the field.

Christopher Bell, No. 20 Toyota Camry, Joe Gibbs Racing

Bell is one of the more underrated road course racers in the field – he was runner-up to William Byron at COTA in 2024 – but he has one big advantage favoring him this weekend: momentum. Besides, he has nothing to lose. Bell's victory at Atlanta on Feb. 23 locked him into the playoffs, meaning he's free to use whatever strategy necessary to go for the win on Sunday.

The layout will throw a new wrinkle into strategy, especially for teams racing for stage points, but Bell and crew chief Adam Stevens should be able to have more strategy options and race more freely with a postseason berth locked up.

IndyCar Series driver Linus Lundqvist, center, takes a selfie with a fan on May 26, ahead of the 108th running of the Indianapolis 500 at Indianapolis Motor Speedway. Lundqvist had his long-term contract with Chip Ganassi Racing terminated in January.
KRISTIN ENZOR/ FOR INDYSTAR / USA TODAY NETWORK

Linus Lundqvist, the 2024 IndyCar Rookie of the Year, says Chip Ganassi Racing terminated his multiyear contract in January near the end of a long offseason, one that will end with Lundqvist on the sidelines without a ride.

Lundqvist said on social media Wednesday that his year with CGR was "a dream come true" and that he is working to "reach a resolution" with the team with the goal of returning to a "competitive seat" in the sport. He will attend this weekend's season opener, he said.

Though CGR confirmed its three-car full-time IndyCar lineup in October, Lundqvist contended he was only notified by the team in January that his deal was being canceled. IndyStar understands Lundqvist was informed before the end of last season that he wouldn't be part of CGR's 2025 full-time driver lineup.

The 2022 Indy NXT champion struggled mightily to find an IndyCar ride in his first year on the market before making three late-season starts in 2023 with Meyer Shank Racing.

Last year, his lone full season, he finished 16th in points. In his fourth start with Ganassi, he earned his first podium (third) at Barber Motorsports Park; four races later, he nabbed his first IndyCar pole by conquering wet conditions at Road America.

However, the Swedish driver totaled only four top-10s; he finished outside the top 20 seven times and 15th or worse nine times in 17 starts for the team that has won four championships in the last five years.

Lundqvist finished two spots and 19 points back in the season standings behind ex-CGR teammate Marcus Armstrong, who also made his IndyCar debut in 2023 in a far more robust 12-race schedule.

Armstrong landed a full-season deal this year with Meyer Shank Racing, which begins a technical alliance with CGR this year.

Although Tuesday's confirmation that Lundqvist wouldn't be on the grid in St. Pete had long been assumed, fans of the driver have long taken issue with the fact his other young teammate last year at CGR, Kyffin Simpson, held on to his Ganassi ride for Year No. 2 in 2025 despite finishing 97 points back of Lundqvist – with a best finish of 12th and only five finishes of 15th or better.

Simpson's family and CGR have formed a robust partnership in recent years, headlined by the full-season primary sponsorship package on his No. 8 Honda held by Journie Rewards, a Canadian gas station and convenience store program operated by Parkland Corp., in which the driver's family holds a significant stake via Simpson Oil.

Lundqvist, on the other hand, has long professed that he doesn't come with deep-pocketed backers. He raced the bulk of last season with primary sponsorship from the American Legion, a multi-year primary sponsor with CGR whose involvement level with the team in 2025 is yet to be understood.

Though CGR could have continued a five-car IndyCar program in 2025, it was heavily influenced to scale back to its present three-car status for this season due to IndyCar's adoption of a charter system that bars teams from owning more than three chartered entries.

Running five full-time cars this year would have meant those two extra cars wouldn't have been guaranteed spots on the grid for the entire calendar.

With 25 charters handed out to teams this offseason, non-Indy 500 grids capped at 27 cars and the addition of Prema Racing's unchartered two-car program, CGR would have risked being bumped from each and every race in 2025 with a fourth or fifth car – making it difficult to secure sponsorship for those cars, which already would have been out of contention for an extra $1 million-plus from the series.

NFL Draft rankings: Can anyone catch Heisman winner for No. 1?

Michael Middlehurst-Schwartz
USA TODAY

The NFL scouting combine kicks off this week, but for teams, the majority of the work to evaluate players has already been completed.

For casual observers, the annual event in Indianapolis might serve as an introduction to some of the names that will come to define the next two months in the lead-up to the 2025 NFL draft. But the interviews, medical checks, testing and drills only serve as the finishing touches to the expansive looks that teams have already given to prospects. Still, there's room for front offices and coaches to be swayed, so prospects will try to put their best foot forward when they hit the field at Lucas Oil Stadium.

Here are our pre-combine top 50 rankings for the 2025 NFL draft:

1. Travis Hunter, CB/WR, Colorado: Without hyperbole, football hasn't seen a player like Hunter in quite some time. The Heisman Trophy winner was downright heroic in pulling double duty at cornerback and wide receiver, excelling at each spot despite a workload that would leave almost anyone else winded.

2. Abdul Carter, DE, Penn State: If anyone else has a claim to the top spot at this point, it might be Carter. The 6-3, 250-pounder moved from linebacker to defensive end last season and unlocked something special. He gets off the line in an instant and slithers past blockers to close in on the ball carrier.

3. Will Johnson, CB, Michigan: The comparisons to Pat Surtain II – the Denver Broncos cornerback and reigning NFL Defensive Player of the Year – are lofty but not outlandish. The 6-1, 203-pounder puts together the size, fluidity and instincts to handle any coverage assignment.

4. Ashton Jeanty, RB, Boise State: As the debate about running back value rages on, Jeanty promises to be a fascinating litmus test. The Heisman Trophy runner-up strung together one of the most dominant seasons in college football history with 2,601 rushing yards and 29 touchdowns on the ground.

5. Cam Ward, QB, Miami (Fla.): After backing out of his initial decision to declare for last year's draft, Ward transferred to Miami and blossomed into college football's most dynamic passer.

6. Tetairoa McMillan, WR, Arizona: The 6-5, 210-pounder has made a habit out of making the spectacular look routine. McMillan is content to pluck jump balls out of the air downfield, but he also thrives working underneath and immediately turning into a run-after-catch threat.

7. Tyler Warren, TE, Penn State: The Nittany Lions deployed the former high school quarterback creatively as the focal point of their offense, and it was easy to see why they did so. The 6-6, 261-pounder can do almost anything asked of him in the passing game, from hauling in contested catches to turning upfield and racking up yards after a quick throw.

8. Will Campbell, OT, LSU: Steadiness is the hallmark of three-year starter and consensus All-American's play. Campbell stays composed and collected in pass protection, though he has some trouble with edge defenders comfortable working back inside.

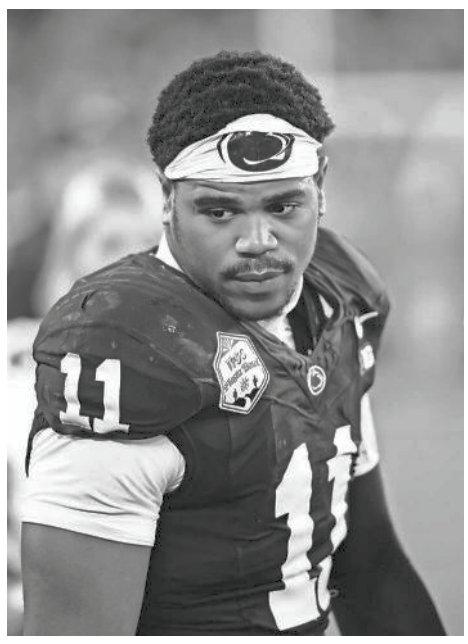

9. Colston Loveland, TE, Michigan: A shoulder injury and shaky quarterback play obscured just what a threat Loveland can be as part of an NFL offense. The 6-5, 245-pounder should regularly create mismatches as an athletic target who is comfortable breaking free from slower defenders or boxing out smaller ones.

10. Mason Graham, DT, Michigan: As a square and squat interior disruptor, Graham will challenge some teams' notions of what a defensive tackle should look like. But his ability to create havoc is readily evident, as he slips past guards thanks to his quick feet and crafty hand usage.

11. Josh Simmons, OT, Ohio State: His stock likely will be linked to his recovery from a season-ending knee injury he suffered in October. So long as teams are comfortable with his prognosis, however, the 6-5, 310-pounder checks many boxes of an upper-echelon pass protector, though he's not as forceful as some of his blocking peers in this class.

12. Jalon Walker, LB, Georgia: At 6-2 and 245 pounds, he'll require creative utilization from his future defensive coordinator, especially if he's to be deployed off the edge. But his playmaking prowess is undeniable, as he can knife past blockers with his length and slippery style, and he's a missile once he locks onto a ball carrier in space.

13. Walter Nolen, DT, Mississippi: The former No. 1 overall recruit didn't fully find his form in his first two years at Texas A&M before transferring, but he broke out in his lone season in Oxford. Nolen excels at shooting the gap, though he's also adept at pushing linemen backward.

14. Jahdae Barron, CB, Texas: The 5-11, 200-pounder probably won't burn up the combine as one of the top athletes at his position. But in a game setting, the Thorpe Award winner has a preternatural sense for finding the football.

15. Armand Membou, OT, Missouri: At 6-3 and 322 pounds, he doesn't look the part of a bookend tackle, and his frame could portend a move to guard. But Membou is equally comfortable pushing opponents around in the run game as he is keeping pass rushers at bay, though his build might leave him susceptible to being beaten by rangier defensive linemen.

17. James Pearce Jr., DE, Tennessee: His blistering initial burst off the line is often enough to give him a runway to the backfield, and he can leverage his rangy frame and formidable punch to take advantage of blockers who are thrown off balance by his speed.

18. Mykel Williams, DE, Georgia: Like Travon Walker before him, Williams represents a gamble on a package of outstanding traits that never coalesced into the fully dominant from many expected from him.

19. Tyler Booker, G, Alabama: There might not be a more powerful blocker in this year's class, as the 6-5, 325-pounder looks to punish anyone in his path.

20. Derrick Harmon, DT, Oregon: Transferring from Michigan State paid off in a major way for Harmon, who had the most pressures of any interior defensive lineman last season with 55, according to Pro Football Focus.

21. Matthew Golden, WR, Texas: With Xavier Worthy and Adonai Mitchell off to the NFL, the Houston transfer stepped in and established himself as the Longhorns' next standout pass-catching prospect.

22. Jihaad Campbell, LB, Alabama: A former edge rusher, Campbell is still somewhat finding his way as an off-ball linebacker, as his recognition skills are underdeveloped.

23. Shavon Revel Jr., CB, East Carolina: If not for a torn ACL suffered in September, he might be firmly entrenched as a first-rounder, as the 6-1, 188-pounder marries an ultra-competitive demeanor at the line of scrimmage with impressive recovery speed and improving ball skills.

24. Kelvin Banks, OT/G, Texas: The Outland Trophy winner is one of the more battle-tested prospects in this class after three years of starting experience.

25. Emeka Egbuka, WR, Ohio State: The 6-1, 205-pounder is far from the most explosive pass catcher in this year's class, but he routinely creates separation thanks to his savvy rather than his athleticism.

26. Malaki Starks, S, Georgia: Starks has been a difference-maker ever since starting as a freshman in Athens, rising to the role of team leader for one of college football's most dominant defenses.

27. Shedeur Sanders, QB, Colorado: Despite operating in a spotlight that might blind other passers, Sanders somehow managed to exceed outsized expectations by establishing himself as a precise and poised distributor.

28. Luther Burden III, WR, Missouri: At a time when other receivers shined, his 2024 season went sideways, with the dynamic slot target averaging just 11.1 yards per game.

29. Shemar Stewart, DE, Texas A&M: There might not be a more imposing defensive prospect in this class than the 6-5, 281-pound edge rusher with a rapid burst off the line.

30. Kenneth Grant, DT, Michigan: Don't pigeonhole the 6-3, 342-pounder as a mere space eater, even though he can command double teams and plug holes against the run.

31. Donovan Jackson, G, Ohio State: Shifting to left tackle during the Buckeyes' title run helped highlight just how far the former five-star recruit has come in his career, as Jackson locked down an array of top-notch edge rushers.

32. Nick Emmanwori, S, South Carolina: At 6-3 and 227 pounds with the speed of a cornerback, he seems perfectly suited to match up with tight ends and bigger receivers.

33. Kaleb Johnson, RB, Iowa: Johnson single-handedly invigorated Iowa's long dormant offense with his smooth running style, averaging 6.4 yards per carry.

34. Donovan Ezeiruaku, DE/OLB, Boston College: After notching 16½ sacks last season, Ezeiruaku already seems to have a master's degree in pass-rushing, as he has a full toolkit of moves he is prepared to wield at just the right moment.

35. Josh Conerly Jr., OT, Oregon: He ended up on the wrong end of a Senior Bowl viral highlight against Green, but that shouldn't define Conerly's pre-draft process.

36. Landon Jackson, DE, Arkansas: The LSU transfer is the kind of player any offensive tackle hates to see lining up across from him, as the 6-7, 280-pounder boasts daunting length, an impressive arsenal of pass-rush moves and a never-say-die mentality.

37. TreVeyon Henderson, RB, Ohio State: Once he gets to the corner, watch out. The 5-10, 208-pounder can't always fight his way through to daylight on inside runs, but Henderson has the burst to break long gains whenever he's given a crease.

38. Azareye'h Thomas, CB, Florida State: The Senior Bowl standout has given evaluators reason to go back and take a closer look at one of the few bright spots in a disappointing season for the Seminoles.

40. Maxwell Hairston, CB, Kentucky: A 179-pound cornerback might be seen by some as a liability more than an asset at the line of scrimmage.

41. Nic Scourton, DE, Texas A&M: The 6-4, 280-pounder can be a load for any lineman to handle, as he embraces contact with active hands, a high-energy approach and plenty of knowhow.

42. Mason Taylor, TE, LSU: The son of Hall of Famer Jason Taylor has made a name for himself on the other side of the ball, proving to be a fluid pass catcher comfortable operating both in space and in traffic.

43. Jaxson Dart, QB, Mississippi: It's hard to tell exactly what a team is getting in a signal-caller who feasted in a scheme that afforded him so many chunk gains off initial reads.

44. Xavier Watts, S, Notre Dame: With 13 interceptions over the last two seasons, the two-time consensus All-American – Notre Dame's first since 1993 – has an unparalleled knack for finding the ball in coverage.

45. JT Tuimoloau, DE, Ohio State: His impact at the next level is likely to be measured more in pressures than sacks, but his disruption still comes in handy.

47. Tre Harris, WR, Mississippi: The 6-3, 210-pounder is far from a finished product as a pass catcher, with the overwhelming bulk of his experience coming on quick hits or deep shots.

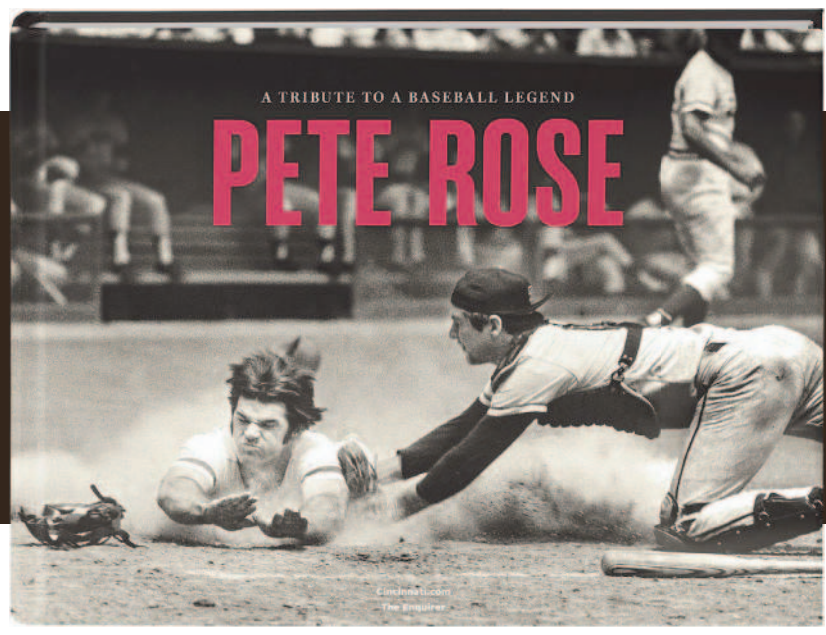

48. Bradyn Swinson, DE, LSU: He hasn't enjoyed the widespread recognition of some other edge rushers in this draft class, but that might soon change.

49. Carson Schwesinger, LB, UCLA: The walk-on who became an All-American is more than just a feel-good story.

50. Omarion Hampton, RB, North Carolina: The 6-0, 220-pounder is perfectly content to run through defenders rather than around them, something he frequently did en route to racking up 30 rushing touchdowns over the last two years.

This might sound like a political statement, but it is not. This is a human relations statement.

I started in the Human Resources field in 1979 following graduate school. I am still practicing HR within our private firm. Somewhere within that period, I functioned for 20 years as a regional Human Resources director for Deloitte overseeing the well-being of 3,500 accounting and consulting professionals. Deloitte is an international Certified Public Accounting firm that built much of its reputation on how to effectively create a supporting HR culture. Forty-six years as an HR practitioner likely qualify me to offer a clear-eyed perspective on how best to treat people.

Humans need to feel respect, caring, understanding, empathy and championing to flourish in a work environment. They also need to understand the parameters of discipline and expectation. Deloitte, being a CPA firm for top-level clients, operated in a demanding and somewhat stressful environment. Much was expected of its leaders and its professionals. We responded to these demands by recruiting the best and the brightest. We also provided the utmost in training, coaching, and support. Our leaders were the best at grooming top-notch professionals.

For as long as I can remember, the knock on politicians was that they said one thing on the campaign trail and did the opposite once elected. But – love him or hate him – everyone who's willing to be honest must admit President Donald Trump is doing precisely what he said he'd do before he defied the pundits and won both the electoral college and the popular vote.

Are you mad that he asked billionaire entrepreneur Elon Musk to lead a government efficiency effort? On Sept. 5, Trump said he'd do just that.

Infuriated that the president is talking directly to Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy and also Russian President Vladimir Putin? He told the country he would do so during his debate with Kamala Harris.

Do you wish Trump would stop wearing out his pen issuing executive orders? It's fine to disagree with the substance of those policies but don't pretend he didn't promise them.

He did.

Save the trip: Gold is safe and sound in Fort Knox

Donald Trump and Elon Musk look like they're getting ready to bring their road show to Kentucky soon to make sure no one has absconded with the gold at Fort Knox.

"We're going to go to Fort Knox, the fabled Fort Knox, to make sure the gold is there," Trump said recently, according to CSPAN. "If the gold isn't there, we're going to be very upset."

It wouldn't be the first time some conspiracy theorist wingnut caused the Treasury Department employees to swing open the 22-ton vault door for politicians to ogle the 24-karat porn housed inside the vault.

He hadn't.

Then, seven congressmen, accompanied by a bunch of newspaper and television reporters, spent nearly four hours as they pored over stacks of gold bullion that was valued at somewhere between $500 million and $2 billion, according to a Courier Journal story, and took part in an "orgy of gaping and groping" the 27.4-pound bars.

"There are clearly gold bars here,"

Trump, Musk doing everything they can to cut federal spending

In Feb. 16's Enquirer, there are several letters to the editor about how horrible Donald Trump and Elon Musk are for firing so many government employees, shutting down departments and agencies, stopping foreign aid, and auditing government offices for abuse, theft and fraud.

The writers of these letters have not one thought about how the country is now $36.22 trillion in debt, and by the end of 2025 we will be $38 trillion in debt, and our government must pay interest on this debt.

These writers have no idea that if we continue increasing debt, in a few years all taxes collected will have to go to interest, and our country's economic system will collapse.

President Trump and Elon Musk are desperately trying to cut spending by getting rid of government employees, agencies, departments and many foreign expenses and all the abuse, corruption and fraud. Democrats and the federal employees, unions, teachers' unions and judges are fighting Trump and Musk every inch of the way.

We can all work together to fight rising antisemitism

In a nation that prides itself on religious freedom, a disturbing trend is emerging – American Jews are increasingly feeling the need to hide their identity. That troubling fact is made clear in the just-released State of Antisemitism in America 2024 Report from the American Jewish Committee.

For the first time in the six years that AJC has conducted this survey of American Jews, a majority (56%) report changing their behavior out of fear of antisemitism, with 40% avoiding publicly wearing or displaying things that might identify them as a Jew. This number was just 26% a year ago.

That could mean deciding whether to wear a yarmulke or a Star of David necklace. Or maybe it's keeping that pro-Israel T-shirt in the drawer before heading to the gym. You may not think twice about what you wear before you go out in the morning. Many Jews don't have that luxury.

The AJC report, the first analysis of the impact of antisemitism on American Jews and U.S. adults during the full year following the Oct. 7 Hamas attack, shows that 90% of American Jews believe antisemitism has increased in the U.S. since that horrific day we saw the murder, torture and kidnapping of more than 1,200 people.

The Hamas attacks were a collective gut punch for Jews, one that is still being acutely felt as we wait for the remaining hostages to be released. And while antisemitism had already been on the rise in this country, it surged to alarming levels following Oct. 7. Seventy-seven percent of Jewish Americans feel less safe living as a Jewish person in the U.S. because of the Hamas attacks. This widespread Jew hatred has only amplified feelings of isolation for our community.

We have seen how that hate has played out in the Tristate, where Jewish events have been disrupted, cemeteries vandalized, and hateful displays of graffiti and extremist propaganda are found throughout our neighborhoods. The entire Cincinnati community – and the country – should be alarmed that one-third (33%) of American Jews reported being the personal target of antisemitism – in person or virtually – at least once over the last year.

Such incidents highlight a growing sense of vulnerability among American Jews. But there is actually some good news to be found in the AJC report: We have allies.

The AJC report found nine in 10 U.S. adults say antisemitism affects society as a whole and that everyone is responsible for combating it, and 34% have spoken out against antisemitism. Also, even as we continue to hear and see vile anti-Israel rhetoric, 85% believe the statement "Israel has no right to exist" is antisemitic. This especially stands out to me in the wake of the attack by Hamas, whose charter calls for the annihilation of Israel and all the world's Jews.

Thankfully, the majority of U.S. adults (69%) have heard and know the term "antisemitism." That means they can better help their Jewish friends and neighbors confront it when they see it. Of the 39% of the general public who saw antisemitism, 70% said they saw it online and on social media – the place where American Jews also encounter anti-Jewish hate at alarming rates. That is why we need everyone to follow the adage, if you see something, say something.

Nearly seven in 10 (69%) American Jews have experienced antisemitism online, including content directed at them. Twenty percent felt physically threatened by these digital encounters. We need help combating and eliminating this hate from our online spaces. Don't hesitate to report it. Companies like Meta, X, and Google also must do better at understanding antisemitism and be more aggressive in tackling this problem. Commitments to free speech and stemming the flow of hate are not mutually exclusive.

When it comes to antisemitism, we really are all in this together. I know that sounds deceptively simple. However, the more we acknowledge that antisemitism is a problem we must all solve, the better we can stand up to any form of hate.

National debt has become a serious drag on economy

Your Turn
Chris Wood
Guest columnist

The amount of interest we pay on our federal debt, expressed as a percent of GDP, has doubled in the past five years. It shows no sign of slowing down.

Why is our debt so much more costly?

It's a product of the overall amount of debt and the average interest rate we pay on it.

The overall amount has been increasing steadily for the past 25 years. There are justifiable reasons for the increase, such as the cost of the Great Recession and COVID-19, and less justifiable reasons, such as the Iraq War and profligate Republican tax cuts under the George W. Bush and Trump 2017-2021 administrations.

The average interest rate is heavily weighted to rates over the past six years because of how the debt cycles. Interest rates have been much higher recently, again due to acceptable (COVID) and unacceptable (Biden overshooting COVID stimulus) reasons.

The debt crisis is a bipartisan failure, but Trump's high tariff, low tax, high deficit platform is going to rapidly accelerate the problem. Indeed, inflation is already creeping up again under Trump, virtually guaranteeing sustained higher rates.

In the long term, this is much more important than what happens at USAID or who Trump nominates for HHS Secretary. The debt is becoming a serious drag on the economy and future generations.

Why is Trump doing this?

Perhaps Trump, along with his Svengali Musk, believes AI will be such an economic miracle that we'll be able to grow our way out of the problem.

But with a declining birth rate and declining immigration, for example, fewer people around to drive that economic growth, that is one heck of a gamble.

Or, maybe he thinks he can force the Fed to print so much money it won't matter. Ask Argentina how well that went for them.

Do we have an alternative?

Well, there is none until the midterms. Will the Democrats be able to bounce back and contest them and force budget realism?

We got a foretaste of their strategy in November when a Democratic congressman, Seth Moulton of Massachusetts, said the party should rethink its stance on biological males playing girls' sports. It was about as normie a take as you could possibly imagine.

But he was savaged from all directions within his party, and even his staff quit.

So, are most Democrats prepared to rethink their gender mania and DEI fundamentalism to focus on real, bread-and-butter issues? It appears not.

But not everyone in the party is satisfied with that.

I've been encouraged to read prolific (and influential) sub-stacker Matt Yglesias' Common Sense Democrat Manifesto. It's a nine-point platform that encourages the Democratic Party to meet the real needs of average Americans and not the meta-spiritual needs of the professional class.

The Common Sense Democrat Manifesto includes the phrases, "We should, in fact, judge people by the content of their character and not the color of their skin," and "Race is a social construct, but biological sex is not."

The center-left think tank Third Way has put out a similar proposal called "Renewing the Democratic Party" that emphasizes the economic needs of the working class.

Right now we're caught between MAGA populism that has us hurtling toward a fiscal cliff, and the out-of-touch woke leadership of the Democrats that cares more about getting boys to dominate girls' sports than winning elections.

But things can change. A new wind is rising. If the Common Sense Democrat wing of the party becomes ascendant, then a durable and competent governing consensus can be achieved.

That's what I'm hoping for heading into the next four years. If the fiscal disaster Trump is brewing up is any indication, we can't afford to miss this opportunity.

Trump administration's tech-friendly agenda puts US in line as digital leader

Your Turn
Jonathan Dever
Guest columnist

Digital technologies have evolved from niche concepts to key drivers of technological and economic progress.

The growing political attention to digital innovation signals a transformative shift in how emerging technologies are perceived and their potential impact on the economy. With President Donald Trump and a Republican-majority Congress now in office, Washington stands ready to embrace its most tech-friendly administration to date. This moment represents a unique opportunity to drive innovation, bolster economic competitiveness, and counter rising international challenges.

Digital technologies have evolved from niche concepts to key drivers of technological and economic progress. Their contributions span job creation, financial inclusion, and the development of a modern digital economy. By embracing advancements like blockchain and digital infrastructure, the U.S. has the chance to lead the global tech landscape, attracting top talent and significant investments that strengthen our economy. This leadership is critical for countering global rivals like China, which has aggressively pursued blockchain innovation and digital currency initiatives.

In a significant move underscoring the administration's commitment to advancing digital spaces, President Trump recently signed an executive order aimed at bolstering the U.S. position in emerging technologies. This order establishes a "Working Group on Digital Asset Markets," tasked with developing a federal regulatory framework for digital innovation and evaluating the creation of a strategic national digital asset stockpile. Notably, the order also prohibits the establishment of a central bank digital currency (CBDC) in the United States.

One of Trump's key promises to the tech industry is an end to the era of regulation by enforcement. He has nominated Paul Atkins, a former SEC commissioner known for his advocacy of reduced regulatory burdens and support for financial innovation, to replace former Chairman Gary Gensler as the new chair of the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC).

Beyond economic growth, support for digital innovation symbolizes a forward-thinking policy approach focused on technological progress and market adaptability. Advocates within the industry emphasize that reducing restrictive regulations could unlock the full potential of blockchain and other technologies. From secure digital identity solutions to streamlining global trade, the applications of these tools promise to revolutionize multiple sectors.

Over-regulating or dismissing emerging digital spaces risks stifling the innovation necessary for maintaining economic leadership. With strategic, balanced policies that protect consumers while encouraging innovation, the U.S. can transform potential challenges into unprecedented opportunities. This approach aligns with recent congressional shifts toward bipartisan support for comprehensive regulation – evidenced by efforts last Congress with the FIT21 Act's bipartisan passage in the U.S. House of Representatives. We are looking forward to more bipartisan and bicameral efforts to establish positive digital technology regulation with the 119th Congress.

The rising focus on digital innovation in Washington offers a pivotal opportunity for policymakers. By supporting this growing sector, the U.S. can secure its position as the leader in the next wave of economic transformation, ensure its competitive edge over global rivals, and reaffirm its commitment to progress and democratic principles.

When and why we use 'anonymous' sources

From the Editor
Beryl Love
Cincinnati Enquirer
USA TODAY NETWORK

In a recent Enquirer story about the local impact of the Trump administration's downsizing of the federal workforce, we quoted an Environmental Protection Agency employee who feared losing her job.

We did not publish her name.

In another story, we granted anonymity to a former member of a church in Madisonville that has been accused of cult-like practices. The woman told our reporter the church had taken over her finances and other aspects of her life. "They gave me nothing when I left. Absolutely nothing," she said. "And I had given them my entire salary for seven years."

It's extremely rare we allow a source to go unnamed in a news story. And I deliberately used the term "unnamed." Though commonly referred to as "anonymous" sources, that's technically not correct. We know who the person is. We know their name and how they are connected to the situation we are reporting about. Unlike what you might have seen in a low-budget detective drama, our reporters don't meet with a source who conceals their identity behind an oversized hat and sunglasses.

Here are some other guidelines we follow when using unnamed sources:

Granting a source anonymity is done as a last resort, when the story absolutely depends on the individual's account. Why? It's a matter of credibility with you, our reader. You deserve to know who our sources are so they can be held accountable for what they say. You might be familiar with the term, "on the record." It's our job to put sources, especially those in powerful, influential positions on the record with the information and viewpoints they provide.

When we grant anonymity, the reason must be extremely compelling, such as when a source is afraid of physical harm or other forms of retribution. In the example of the EPA employee, she feared losing her job. We might also consider using an unnamed source if the information sheds light on a serious threat to the safety and well-being of members of our community.

Like with any source, the information provided must be rigorously verified. Are there documents? We want them. Are other sources able to corroborate the account? We need to talk with them. Does the source have a questionable motive for providing the information? The last thing I want is to be played by someone with a hidden agenda. In the Madisonville church story, reporter Victoria Moorwood spoke with several former church members who were willing to be identified. It's likely we would not have published that story without sources willing to go on the record.

Finally, we adhere to a formal approval process when using an unnamed source. In short, it's not solely left up to the reporter; the final approval comes from me after vetting the source with the reporter and senior editors. I insist on knowing who the individual is, by name, and how they are connected to the story subject. I also insist that we share that connection, when at all possible, with our readers.

For example, in our story about federal job cuts, we didn't just say, "a source who requested anonymity," and leave it at that. We identified her as a federal worker and stated why she requested anonymity. This transparency with you, our readers, is essential.

How do you feel about the use of unnamed sources? As always, I welcome your thoughts and feedback.

Does Ramaswamy think Ohio can pay its bills with a bake sale?

Your Turn
Thomas Suddes
Guest columnist

Upper Arlington tech billionaire and Cincinnati-born Vivek Ramaswamy, age 39, announced something last week that many Ohioans already knew – he's running for governor of Ohio in 2026's statewide Republican primary.

And Ramaswamy was immediately endorsed for the governorship by Vladimir Putin's American bestie, President Trump, who handily carried Ohio in 2016, 2020 and 2024. (Other Republicans running for governor: Attorney General David Yost, of Columbus, and Heather Brazell-Hill, of Malta.)

Ramaswamy has earned a sterling academic record – a Harvard bachelor's degree, a Yale law degree – and earlier was valedictorian of his class at the Jesuits' all-male St. Xavier High School in Cincinnati.

Among other campaign promises, Ramaswamy said that if he's elected governor, he would repeal Ohio's state income tax and Ohio's local real-estate taxes.

For calendar year 2024 collections, local governments took in about $16 billion in taxes on Ohio residential and agricultural real estate.

And for the fiscal year ending June 30, Ohio legislative budget analysts estimate state income-tax collections will total about $10 billion.

That's a combined $26 billion a year.

How would a Gov. Ramaswamy replace those lost revenues? With bake sales?

School vouchers and the Ohio constitutional don't mesh

Add Greater Cleveland's Berea city schools to the roster of 140-plus public school districts challenging the constitutionality of Ohio's private-school voucher giveaway.

The General Assembly has boosted funding for private school vouchers from $595 million in 2023-24 to $971 million last school year, cleveland.com reported. The vouchers help parents pay for private school tuition.

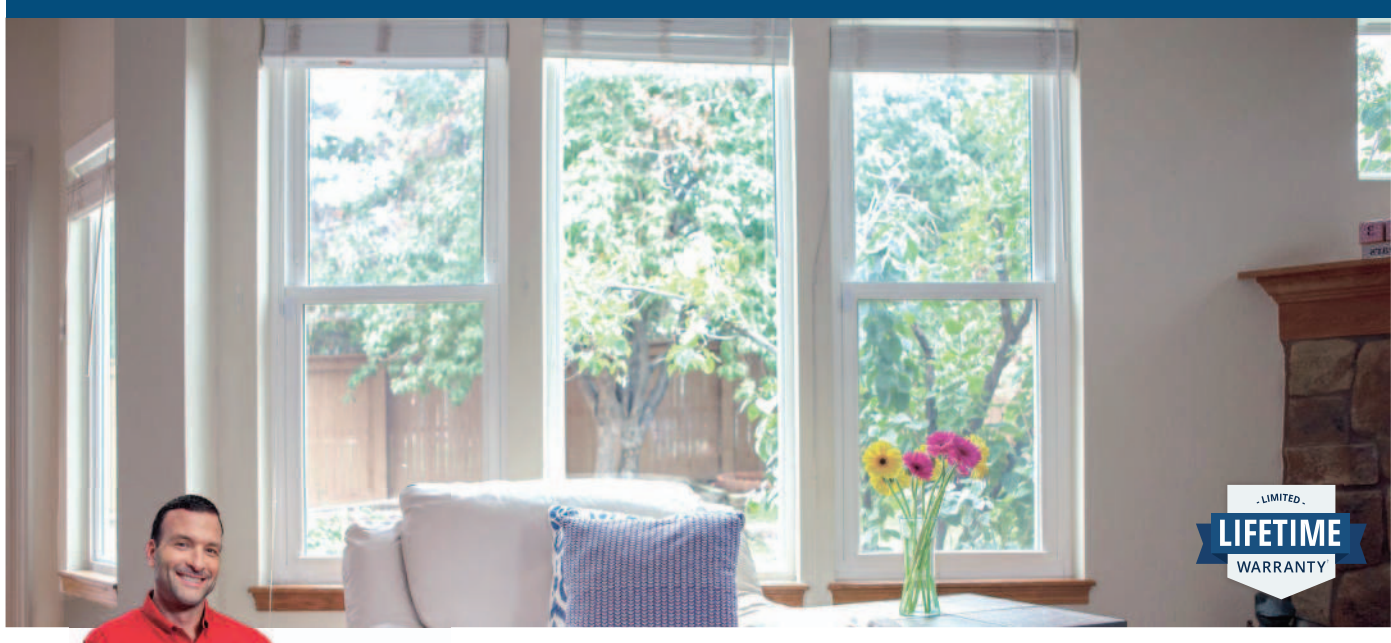

The largest slice of that money is mainly given to families with children already enrolled in private schools rather than parents seeking to transfer their children out of (purportedly) underperforming public schools.

True, in 2002 the U.S. Supreme Court upheld by a 5-4 vote a pilot voucher program the General Assembly devised in mid-1995 – the Cleveland Scholarship and Tutoring Program – for children who live inside what's now the Cleveland Metropolitan School District. (Earlier in 1995, U.S. Circuit Judge Robert B. Krupansky, decrying managerial chaos in what was then the Cleveland City School District, gave state officials control of the district.)

As a practical matter, Ohio's current

Trump, Musk doing what previous administrations could not

After reading all the negative articles in The Enquirer about Donald Trump and his right-hand man, Elon Musk, you would think he took over running America instead of being duly elected. Both men have a record of growing and managing very successful companies. By streamlining the federal government, they are doing what the career politicians in previous administrations had difficulty doing.

I'm not a fan of his personality or ego, but I do think he is trying to do what he said he would do when he was voted into his second term. The jury is still out on the outcome, but he is doing what he told the populace he would do when and if he got back in the Oval Office. He's just doing it quickly and addressing most issues all at once after returning.

It is kind of a shock, but we need to wait and see.

Bob McElroy, Anderson

Lives are being destroyed by flurry of federal layoffs

The flurry of firings of federal employees has prompted a huge backlash. Loss of a paycheck and benefits, especially medical plan benefits, is painful enough. But the subtlety of the terminations is even more severe.

All of the separating employees have supposedly received letters informing them that they are being terminated for "performance" issues. The implications of this phrase are devastating. Under Washington, D.C., unemployment laws, a terminated employee who loses their job through their own fault is ineligible for unemployment compensation. This, of course, can be interpreted that all these individuals will be denied unemployment benefit income in one of the most expensive cities in the world until they find other employment.

Further, when they apply for other positions, they will be asked why they left their last job. With a "performance" letter in their history, it may become difficult to convince a prospective employer to hire them. The conclusion is that – despite being part of a politically inspired mass layoff – the "performance" comment (which doesn't ring true) may haunt these individuals due to lack of unemployment benefits and future hires.

So, the way they were dismissed – through no fault of their own – will be extremely damaging. Trump and Musk obviously planned this step to avoid paying and being charged for unemployment payments. Possibly, Trump sees these "savings" as the source of the Wealth Fund as he copies the Saudi's Wealth Fund.

Whatever the plan, lives are being destroyed without regard to the aftermath. When Musk stands before a crowd of reporters and boasts with a smug smile that he's going to reduce the size of government, the fired individuals suffer immediately.

Use nurse practitioners to serve rural Ohioans' medical needs

A couple of years ago, The Enquirer ran an article about nurse practitioners trying to get permission to provide medical care without being tied to a doctor. I don't know if that was OK'd or not.

If it wasn't, that could be a partial solution to providing care to rural Ohioans. Also, physician assistants could fill the gaps.

If the state of Ohio and/or rural counties paid off the loans that the nurse practitioners and physician assistants took out to get their degrees with a commitment of several years to serve in those rural counties, this could turn things around for those Ohioans.

Voters behind Trump's efforts to rein in government waste

Scripted hysteria is bad party policy as Democrats confront President Donald Trump's decisive electoral victory and decisive first weeks back in the saddle. He has deputized Elon Musk, a particular bugbear for the party because of his speedy efficiency at exposing wasteful agencies of government long held sacrosanct by the liberal caste. Trump's second first 100 days has obviously been informed by his first term, a rather dismal Democratic onslaught of invective instead of the usual bipartisan honeymoon.

While Democrats have not learned a thing, voters are solidly behind the efforts to reform the inefficient federal behemoth.

Trump administration's war on science affects us all

Right now, we are witnessing the Republican war on poor people, our allies and our system of government. One of the less-covered aspects is that the war on science is alive and well. And now with all this power, they have a greater chance than ever of hiding the truth and teaching people otherwise.

This war on science affects everyone in marginalized communities. Right now, we're seeing huge cuts in NIH and CDC funding, which will completely decimate medical research, not to mention Donald Trump's willful destruction of the environment.

This comes 100 years after the Scopes Monkey Trial, where a schoolteacher in Tennessee was arrested and put on trial for teaching evolution in his classroom.

Now, states are in the process of passing bills, making the teaching of creationism mandatory in schools, while the teaching of evolution and climate change will also be forbidden.

Robert F. Kennedy Jr., who was just confirmed as secretary of Health and Human Services, won't be using the NIH or the CDC anyway because what they do includes developing vaccines.

The lone Republican senator who voted against Kennedy is Mitch McConnell. McConnell had plenty of time to help avoid all of this prior Trump criminality and current nonsense, but he chose not to.

Trump's sweeping, willy-nilly firing of tens of thousands of federal employees from just about every federal agency, not caring for the dedicated employee and their family's well-being, is beyond despicable.

We are four weeks into this train wreck with four years to go. Buckle up, because it's going to be a wild, bumpy ride.

Cincinnati leaders set a bad example for following laws

Thank you, Cincinnati, for showing us how to obey the laws we like and ignore the laws we don't. In Feb. 18's Enquirer, Cincinnati City Council said it "will not be bullied" by the requirements of federal immigration laws.

Neither will we. I refuse to be bullied into paying city taxes. I refuse to be bullied into paying real estate taxes. I refuse to be bullied into stopping at red lights. I refuse to be bullied into listening to anything our elected city officials try to bully us with.

News coverage giving neo-Nazis what they want – attention

On Feb. 7, Lincoln Heights was visited by a very small group of neo-Nazis. They arrived in a windowless cargo truck which I think demonstrates that they came from the bottom of society. When confronted, they could not get back into the darkness of the truck fast enough for a speedy exit. We have not heard from them since that day.

My concern is that I am still hearing about them every day in The Enquirer. I fear that this group is being energized by the daily news reports related to their assault on Lincoln Heights. I realize that local citizens out patrolling with guns is new news, but it was covered in the Feb. 20 Enquirer.

Ramaswamy well equipped to be Ohio's next governor

Holly Cahall of Monroe apparently has a much lower opinion of Vivek Ramaswamy's leadership qualities than the president of the U.S.

Ramaswamy has been the CEO of a successful tech company he founded and now is working with perhaps the most successful business and leading visionary to uncover billions in fraud, waste and inefficiency of a two-million-person organization – the federal bureaucracy.

I believe he will perform the same services here as the governor of Ohio in a D-OH-G-E program.

Consumer caution is advised in wake of inspectors general firings

I found the following statement in the Feb. 20 Enquirer article, "Fed minutes: Trump policies concerning," very informative: "Business leaders are telling Fed officials they want to raise prices but are uncertain how consumers will respond; tariffs may add to costs, but steps to deregulate some industries may offset those pressures."

That same week, just before the Fed meeting, our federal government fired more than a dozen inspectors general. This consumer will respond with increased caution to all consumer transactions in the future.

I welcome the Trump administration's audit by DOGE

First and foremost, do I agree with everything President Trump does or says? No. I believe that he and Elon Musk could be enjoying life now without putting up with the abuse and headaches they are enduring in their present government positions.

But how can anyone argue against the fact that the U.S. cannot continue the spending without bankrupting us, as a nation, for our grandchildren? Previous administrations of presidents such as Clinton, Obama and Bush have preached this fact, but we continue adding to the deficit.

Now we have proof of wasteful spending such as millions being spent on "Sesame Street" TV programming in Iraq, stupid animal studies, aid to countries that hate the United States, paying someone "150 years old" Social Security, federal employees who don't report to work and buildings that are nearly vacant.

I have read that 10-20% of American taxpayers pay the majority of the federal taxes in our country. As one of those citizens, I welcome the Trump administration's audit by DOGE. We now need Congress to make these changes official by stopping this stupid spending and putting the saved money towards the deficit, and maybe even send some of the dollars to us taxpayers to make up for the years of thinking it is their money to waste on dumb projects.

Trump can't cancel funds already approved by Congress

Concerning the coercive threat of cutting off funding to institutions that support DEI, only 19% of the U.S. population supports the white, Christian, nationalism movement (the right-wing ideologue that believes DEI weakens a nation by treating women and racial, religious and gender minorities as equal to white, Christian men).

Additionally, it is illegal to cancel funding already approved by Congress.

It is time to put a stop to the current administration threatening businesses for not kowtowing to these illegal mandates and begin focusing on key matters (our reputation as the greatest democratic nation in the world).

McConnell isn't to blame for Trump's return to office

Your Turn
Al Cross
Guest columnist

Speaker of the House Paul Ryan, center, and Senator Mitch McConnell listen to President Donald Trump during the 2017 Presidential Inauguration at the Capitol on Jan. 20. ROBERT HANASHIRO-USA TODAY SPORTS

Donald Trump has been back in office one month, and his job-approval ratings are his highest ever – but lower than for any new president in polling history (except for him in 2017). That caveat doesn't temper dismay among Democrats and other Trump critics who can't understand why more Americans don't realize or care that he is wrecking or warping much of the government and making fundamental changes in foreign policies that have made our nation the leader of the world for 80 years.

Recall that Trump's stock in trade is simple answers to complex problems, and that the first month of his second term has focused on attacking things many voters have long found unpopular: illegal immigration, key to his elections; foreign aid, interruptions of which are killing people and weakening America's case overseas; and government itself, which is widely viewed as inefficient, wasteful, prone to corruption and out of touch.

Much of what the administration says about government is off base; 11 of its 12 claims about the Agency for International Development are misleading, lacking context or outright wrong, says Washington Post fact-checker Glenn Kessler. But such traditional news sources are being out-shouted by the pro-Trump media system that tells his followers what they want to hear.

So, it's a frustrating time for Democrats, who can't figure out how to get leverage when Republicans are distressingly compliant to Trump and the only major obstacle to autocracy seems to be the courts – along with the hope that Trump won't defy judicial orders and cause a constitutional crisis.

Was failure to convict Trump for Jan. 6 attack McConnell's fault?

In the absence of a strategy, many Trump critics spend time blaming his return on Sen. Mitch McConnell and what they call his failure to get Trump convicted on impeachment for the Jan. 6, 2021, insurrection and then disqualify him from holding office.

That is a charge not proven. It relies mainly on the McConnell mythology that the Senate's longest-serving party leader, who kept a Supreme Court seat vacant for 14 months, surely could have persuaded nine more Republicans to vote against Trump. Only seven did, and 17 were needed to reach the 67 needed for conviction. McConnell said Trump was "practically and morally responsible" for the insurrection but voted against conviction, using the unproven legal theory that impeachment is not constitutional after an officeholder leaves office.

From the start, McConnell called the vote one of conscience, on which he didn't try to persuade any colleagues. Then he told his latest biographer, Michael Tackett, that he couldn't have gotten to 67.

Could he have done it? "It's the great what-if of our time," Jonathan Martin, top columnist for Politico, told me. "My guess is he would have had a shot, but it would have been difficult ... especially a month later." (McConnell rejected then-Speaker Nancy Pelosi's call to reconvene Congress for impeachment and a quick trial during Trump's final week in office.) I agree with Martin, based on the number of Republicans in Trump states who ran for reelection in 2022, and polling in the days after Jan. 6.

Republicans' approval ratings for McConnell and Pence

Polls showed Republicans' approval of McConnell and then-Vice President Mike Pence, Trump's main target on Jan. 6, fell sharply, but Trump lost just a few points. Senators could see he still had a grip on their voters, and it would have taken an all-out effort by McConnell to get nine votes to go with his own.

If he had fallen short, Trump supporters would have ruled the Republican caucus by more than 2-1, with Trump still eligible to run and exercise great influence. That's not a recipe for remaining as leader, or regaining a majority in the 2022 midterm elections. And if he had succeeded, having almost two-thirds of his caucus opposed to him on such an elemental issue would have caused similar problems.

That said, I wish my senior senator had been willing to risk his political imperatives for the sake of the country. But he thought the Democrats would "take care of the son of a bitch for us," as he said early on the morning of Jan. 7. That was a lost gamble – ironically, due to Merrick Garland, whom he kept off the court.

If McConnell didn't realize then that Trump is an existential threat to the republic as we have known it, I hope he does now. He's no longer Republican leader, but an intellectual force among GOP senators and chairs the defense appropriations subcommittee, where he says he will resist Trump's isolationist impulses. He has long favored foreign aid, as does then-Trump Defense secretary James Mattis, who said "If you don't fund the State Department fully, then I need to buy more ammunition."

So, as Democrats look for some sort of counterforce to Trump, they should wish their old adversary McConnell well. He turned 83 on Thursday.

statewide private school vouchers are political subsidies for voters – many in Republican suburbs – who can already afford private school tuition.

Meanwhile, the General Assembly fiddle-faddles over skyrocketing property taxes (by dollar amount, roughly 70% of which fund public school) crushing Ohio homeowners.

The legislature's dawdling over real-estate taxes, while lavishing Ohioans' state tax payments on private schools, virtually invites a voter signature-initiated ballot issue that'd slam a meat ax into Ohio's property tax setup.

Ohioans who remember California's 1978 Proposition 13 – the Jarvis-Gann tax-cut initiative – know what an Ohio anti-tax ballot issue could do: Good luck, public schools; nice to have you while we could, great Ohio libraries.

The General Assembly's subsidy of non-public schools with public money is flat-out unconstitutional.

The Ohio Constitution requires the legislature to "secure a thorough and efficient system of common schools throughout the state," and forbids any "religious or other sect, or sects, [to] ever have any exclusive right to, or control of, any part of the school funds of this state."

Some pro-voucher hairsplitters try to argue that "common schools" aren't the same as "public schools." If so, that would sluice Ohio taxpayers' money away from public schools, which are subject to elected, taxpayer-accountable school boards, toward private, very private, schools.

That "common" vs. "public" argument was refuted long ago by Ohio's then-attorney general, future governor and U.S. Sen. John W. Bricker, an ultra-conservative Columbus Republican. In a 1933 opinion, Bricker ruled "state school funds could be used only 'for the establishment or maintenance of common or public schools.'" Such schools, Bricker added, " 'were those popularly referred to as synonymous with the term common schools as used in the state constitution.' "

That suggests that the mis-spending (to use a polite word) of taxpayers' money that should go to public schools will continue unless some judges step up. But given the Ohio Supreme Court's deference (to use another polite word) to their fellow Republicans in the General Assembly, that's a reach.

US vote against condemning Russia was a mistake

Dace Potas
USA TODAY

Last week, the Trump administration dove headfirst into the foreign policy arena, negotiating with both Russia and Ukraine separately on the framework for ending the war in Ukraine.

After President Donald Trump made a series of outrageous comments, our allies in the rest of Europe have expressed concern about our reliability in the event of further conflict. Just as he did in his first term, Trump has valid concerns about America's international agreements but lacks the nuance necessary to negotiate change properly.

The Trump administration has no problem sparking worry among our allies so long as its message is politically convenient to its supporters.

Trump is right about NATO spending, but approach is wrong

Trump's friendliness toward Russia last week has already spooked our NATO allies, and Trump has historically been critical of the world's largest military alliance. The bad foreign policy continued on Monday when the United States voted against a United Nations resolution condemning Russia.

I've thought for a long time that NATO countries don't spend enough on their defense. Nine of the 32 countries in NATO cannot even meet the target of spending 2% of their gross domestic product on the military. The U.S. spends 3.38%. NATO members bringing their expenditures in line with the U.S. would significantly improve their security.

However, the Trump administration is inspiring change in the wrong way.

Trump lacks the nuance to navigate delicate foreign policy matters. NATO is an essential military alliance for the United States in the event of a world war, and our influence over member countries also gives us strength and security in times of peace.

There are better ways to spur change within NATO when it comes to spending than undermining its security. Trump's friendliness with Russia has done exactly that, and emboldening a hostile power by spreading its propaganda is anti-American.

The good outcome from all of this is that Europe will hopefully become less reliant on America for defense, instead building up its infrastructure, which will strengthen NATO into the future.

However, the negative impact is that in the immediate future, Russia and China may surmise that America is unwilling to fund conflicts abroad and see little opposition to their territorial desires. The Chinese have their eyes on Taiwan, and I'm not so sure that America would intervene in any way should they act. When the dust settles on Ukraine, Moscow could continue to look westward in its territorial quest.

Trump is emboldening our enemies while undermining faith in us among our allies. Europeans feel they cannot depend on us to defend them and will move on without us.

Trump, Vance want to end the conflict, even if it weakens US

Elon Musk has been dominating headlines about the Trump administration's domestic policies, so much so that he has taken attention away from Trump's vice president, JD Vance.

However, as the Trump administration delves into foreign policy, Vance is taking on a more significant role, increasing his influence.

Vance has long been critical of American intervention in the Ukraine conflict, and now that he has ascended to the White House, he is getting his wish through Trump.

The MAGA movement to which Vance belongs is highly skeptical of American dollars going abroad. Trump and Vance have not been shy about embracing the same outlook, even if it means weakening U.S. interests.

To give Vance credit, he has maintained that he wants Ukraine to keep "sovereign independence," even in the face of reports that Russian President Vladimir Putin is looking to take all of Ukraine.

U.S. negotiators have also made it clear that they wish to maintain a sovereign Ukraine through a mineral use agreement with Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy's government. The deal would provide billions in value for the U.S. as Trump hopes to recoup some of America's investment.

However, Trump's comments muddied the long-term future of the relationship between America and Ukraine.

While I don't envy the Trump administration's bargaining position on the matter of Ukraine, Trump has given up what little leverage remained by publicly making concessions to Russia and parroting Putin's propaganda.

Ukraine and our allies in the rest of Europe are rightfully worried by our volatile foreign policy stances. As his term continues, Trump is likely to further disrupt faith in America's international position.

Rep. John H. Rousselot, a California Republican, said after he spent quality time with the gold.

From the newspaper coverage, it seemed like the congressmen acted a lot like Scrooge McDuck – rolling around in his riches.

Trump, Musk will play in Fort Knox gold while federal employees head to unemployment line

It doesn't take a real vivid imagination to imagine Trump and Musk doing the same thing — quacking at each other gleefully as they play among the gold, as thousands of former federal employees head to the unemployment line because Musk's kiddie corps decided their jobs were wasteful.

Musk is the primary source of this "question" about whether or not the gold is there.

He posted on "X," the social media platform he owns, on Feb. 17, "Who is confirming that gold wasn't stolen from Fort Knox? Maybe it's there, maybe it's not. That gold is owned by the American public! We want to know if it's still there."

Now, I hope you're not buying too much of what Musk is saying here. Because he lies. A lot.

I asked "Grok," the artificial intelligence tool on X, who the most pervasive spreader of lies on the platform is.

According to Grok, it's impossible to say who is the worst but … . "That said, various analyses, reports, and even sentiment on the platform often point to Elon Musk as a top contender. His massive following – over 200 million as of recently – gives him unmatched reach, and he's been called out for sharing misleading claims on topics like elections, COVID-19, and conspiracy theories."

Musk hasn't proven claims of government waste

That's part of why I have trouble believing Musk when he rants and raves about government waste and, with Trump's permission, orders thousands of federal workers laid off because he says they are wasteful or aren't doing their jobs.

He hasn't proven any of the employees are wasteful or weren't doing their jobs and has spread misinformation about what his computer geniuses have pulled up – including the untrue claim that the government spent $50 million for condoms for Palestinians.

Some of that "waste" is money that goes to finding cures for cancer or other diseases, protecting our nuclear arsenal, or getting much needed supplies and medicine to people in the poorest countries.

It goes to protecting our environment, making sure people who visit our national parks and forests are safe, and help our veterans.

That doesn't sound too wasteful to me.

What's wasteful would be a trip to Kentucky to learn what we already know – the gold is safe and sound.

How do we know that?

Because Trump's treasury secretary says so.

Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent told iHeart Radio host Dan O'Donnell last week "all the gold is present and accounted for."

According to Bessent, an audit is conducted every year to make sure all the gold is there.

The Associated Press reported recently that there are about 147 million ounces of gold at the depository at Fort Knox. Based on the price of gold I found online Monday morning, that's worth about $430 billion.

Why does Musk really want to tour Fort Knox?

What this is looking like, more and more, is a scam that will allow Musk, the richest man in the world, to use the federal government and its resources to bolster X.

"The ratings on a live broadcast of Fort Knox would be (two fire emojis)," Musk tweeted last week.

That same day, he responded to Alex Jones, another conspiracy theorist, "It would be cool to do a live video walkthrough of Fort Knox!"

He's not said the live broadcast would be on "X," but what do you think?

Instead of wasting taxpayers' money by coming to Kentucky, Musk ought to spend his time learning that a government should be here to help the poorest among us and not to help the richest man in the world promote one of his businesses.

"Democracy is the theory that the common people know what they want and deserve to get it – good and hard."

We've haven't seen this kind of accountability in decades

While I don't agree with all the president's priorities, there can be little doubt he's doing much of what he said he'd do. It's a level of accountability to election promises unlike anything we've seen in decades.

Those ideologically opposed to this administration will never agree on its policy direction. But finding genuine misuse of taxpayer dollars is something people of every political stripe agree on.

Virtually every presidential candidate in my lifetime has promised to reduce "waste, fraud and abuse" in government programs. Few have even made a dent. The only time since 1970 that the federal budget ran a surplus was during Bill Clinton's second term.

Trump fervently campaigned on the urgency of cutting government spending and reducing our $36 trillion national debt. A recent column by Tim Swarens referred to it as an impending "debt death spiral" if spending isn't brought under control.

It could happen.

It's easy to become desensitized to reporting on spending and debt in the billions and trillions of dollars. Our current debt is like the average U.S. household having an extra $325,000 credit card balance. No one would sleep soundly with that kind of crushing financial burden and neither should our country.

And, no, even over-taxing all the "millionaires and billionaires" in the country wouldn't bail us out. Confiscating every dollar of the income from the top 1% of taxpayers would still leave the average household with $313,000 on its American Excess credit card. The only solution is to cut up that card.

DOGE is spinning heads

Enter Trump's promised "Department of Government Efficiency," headed by Elon Musk. DOGE for short.

Musk's youthful team of computer sleuths have been deployed at the precise time AI has created financial review tools that far exceed the ability of even a stadium full of accountants and auditors.

But here's the reality: AI-driven financial oversight isn't partisan. Waste is waste. Accountability is accountability.

The capability for AI to review unfathomably huge amounts of data for errors, inconsistencies and irregularities is stunning to behold. The items flagged can then be reviewed by humans versed in accountability.

This technology can also help Ohio. Gov. Mike DeWine's proposed budget, which may leave many school districts, including some in central Ohio, short millions of dollars.

A DOGE endeavor in how Ohio funds its schools could find enough misspending to cover this shortfall. And, as someone who spent eight years as an elected school board member who grappled with budget issues, I say let's give it a try.

No wonder Ohio Attorney General Dave Yost is suggesting a DOGE-like project for our state.

Of course, not everyone embraces this trend. Bureaucrats who've long thrived on inefficiency are already crying foul. Career politicians, whose reelection strategies depend on endless government expansion, are sputtering and even cursing.

And the same pols who claim Trump is creating a constitutional crisis for exercising executive authority reject their own accountability for ceding those powers to the executive for decades.

But here's the reality: AI-driven financial oversight isn't partisan. Waste is waste. Accountability is accountability. If the technology exists to ferret out fraud, incompetence and inefficiency, why wouldn't we welcome it?

For all the noise about the first month of Trump, one thing is clear: he made promises and is keeping them. That might be a new phenomenon in politics, but it shouldn't be.

Accountability is in, inefficiency is out – and it appears democracy can handle a little spring cleaning.

Ohio economy's continued success not guaranteed

Your Turn

Pat Tiberi, Baiju Shah, Gary Lindgren and Jason Hall
Guest columnists

Ohio is experiencing an economic renaissance, creating new jobs and opportunities across the state.

In recent years, we have secured transformational investments – from Intel's semiconductor manufacturing to the LG/Honda battery plant to Ford's EV plant expansion, and from a surge in data centers built by Meta, Google, Amazon and Microsoft to major advancements in aerospace, defense and energy manufacturing with GE Aerospace, Joby Aviation, Anduril and Ultium Cells.

These wins, driven by Ohio's business-friendly climate and strategic investments, have made our state a national leader in economic development.

Yet, with this growth comes new challenges. To sustain this momentum and position Ohio for long-term success, we must act now to address pressing needs in energy, housing and workforce development.

As leaders of the Ohio CEO Leadership Alliance, representing Ohio's four major CEO-led business groups – the Ohio Business Roundtable, Cincinnati Business Committee, Columbus Partnership and Greater Cleveland Partnership – we urge policymakers to take decisive action on key priorities in the current state budget process to ensure Ohio remains competitive for decades to come.

Energy must be reliable to support growth

After decades of stagnation, power demand in the U.S. is expected to surge, including a 50% increase in Ohio's peak demand by 2034. With electricity demand rising, Ohio faces potential power shortages within two years – threatening future investments and economic stability.

The Ohio Business Roundtable's Energy Competitiveness Study outlines an all-of-the-above strategy to strengthen the state's energy infrastructure.

Policymakers must accelerate new power generation using both renewables and Ohio's abundant natural gas, ease regulations to allow major users to develop on-site energy solutions and lead on new energy and grid technologies.

Housing shortage must be addressed to support workforce growth

A severe housing shortage is making it harder for workers — especially middle-class families — to live near their jobs.

To meet demand, we support expanding the state's low-income housing tax credit, responsibly reducing zoning barriers and accelerating the conversion of existing buildings into housing.

These steps will ensure Ohio's workforce can grow alongside its economy.

Our education system must build talent for the future

Through Ohio Excels, we are working to improve K-12 literacy and math, expand career-connected learning, strengthen school choice, make postsecondary education accessible and invest in up-skilling workers with tech credentials. We urge state leaders to accelerate efforts that equip Ohioans for high-wage, high-growth careers, particularly in STEM and AI-driven fields.

Innovation must be used to drive the economy

Positioning Ohio as a leader in market-driven innovation is key to accelerating growth.

While R&D activity aligns with national averages, the state lags in translating innovation into economic impact. Strengthening financial investments in innovation hubs, public-private partnerships and commercialization programs will help scale startups, attract corporate R&D and drive breakthrough technologies.

The moment for action is now

Ohio's economy is on the rise, but continued success is not guaranteed.

Our state has experienced decades of population stagnation and slow GDP growth, losing congressional representation every decade for 60 years. While recent economic gains are promising, we cannot afford complacency.

We stand at a pivotal moment – one where bold action can solidify Ohio's status as a national leader in economic development and job growth. The policy priorities outlined above will ensure energy reliability, workforce readiness, housing availability and innovation-driven growth – securing long-term prosperity for all Ohioans.

The Ohio CEO Leadership Alliance is committed to working alongside Gov. Mike DeWine and state lawmakers to drive these efforts forward.

Now is the time to act.

One in six Ohio children are poor, according to the 2024 State of Poverty in Ohio report. PROVIDED BY GETTY IMAGES

The "American dream" is a "better, richer and happier life for all our citizens of every rank," wrote historian James Truslow Adams over a century ago.

Yet with ordinary Americans succumbing to "deaths of despair" at alarming rates, rates of happiness hitting record lows and way too many men and women stuck in poverty across generations, it's probably no surprise that a growing share of Americans say the dream is out of reach.

A 2024 Wall Street Journal poll found that only one in three U.S. adults believe the American dream still "holds true" compared to half of men and women in 2012.

This could not be more relevant for the state of Ohio.

Ohio ranks third in deaths of despair – deaths related to suicide, drug overdoses or alcohol poisoning. A staggering one in six Ohio children are poor, according to the 2024 State of Poverty in Ohio, putting the state in the top third of states for child poverty.

And the state ranks in the bottom quintile for hope, according to the Brookings Institute.

These are long odds for too many Buckeyes who aspire to a "better, richer and happier life."

Marriage, family stability, fertility hope and the future

A new report from the Center for Christian Virtue and the Institute for Family Studies argues that one essential element to reviving the American dream in Ohio is strengthening and stabilizing family life across the state.

The Hope and a Future report finds that Ohio ranks 29th when it comes to its Family Structure Index, which is based on state trends in marriage, family stability and fertility.

For instance, just 47.6% of Ohio children are raised in intact, married families for the duration of childhood, well below the national average of 53%. This below-average standing matters because strong, stable families are a powerful predictor of upward mobility.

Harvard economist Raj Chetty and his colleagues at Opportunity Insights have underscored the connection between upward mobility – the classic rags-to-riches trajectory from childhood into adulthood – and family structure.

His 2014 study found that the strongest community-level predictor of mobility for poor kids was the share of two-parent families in a community. In other words, poor children have a markedly higher chance of achieving the American dream if they grow up in places with a higher share of two-parent families.

The share of children living in a single-parent home varies a great deal across the state. It ranges from 5% in Holmes County and 8% in Geauga County to 34% in Lucas County and 38% in Cuyahoga County.

How two-parents households connect to the American dream

After analyzing Chetty's Opportunity Insights data, we found that these regional trends are tied to the average adult household income of children raised in poor households (whose parental income was below the 25th percentile) across Ohio.

For poor children born in 1992, as the share of two-parent households within a county increased, their average household income as adults also rose. Specifically, poor children who grew up in Ohio counties with lots of single-parent families only reached about the 40th percentile in household income as young adults. However, poor children who grew up in communities where 85% or more of the households were headed by two-parent families typically reached above the 50th percentile as young adults.

For example, poor children raised in Holmes or Putnam County, marked by high numbers of two-parent families, reached close to the 60th percentile as 27-year-olds, compared to poor children raised in Cuyahoga or Hamilton County, which have more single-parent families, who reached just under the 40th percentile at the same age.

In other words, children born poor in Holmes or Putnam County had above-average household incomes as adults. These figures suggest the American dream is much more alive in communities across Ohio where strong and stable families are the clear norm.

So, Chetty's data is clear.

Two-parent households are essential for upward mobility in Ohio.

The problem, though, is that too many communities across the state do not have enough of the kind of strong and stable families that foster this kind of economic mobility – not to mention minimizing deaths of despair and maximizing happiness for ordinary men and women.

That's because the Buckeye State is below the national average when it comes to family stability.

What should Ohio leaders do and why DeWine's proposed child tax credit matters

The challenge, then, facing Ohio leaders is to take steps to strengthen marriage and family life across the state.

Policymakers should ask public schools to teach the Success Sequence (which underlines the importance of education, work and marriage), get behind Gov. Mike DeWine's proposed child tax credit designed to help ease the financial challenges facing working- and middle-class families and ensure that state policies do not penalize marriage.

And religious, educational and civic leaders should do more to foster the values and virtues that make for stable and happy marriages and families across the state. In other words, if they are intent on reviving the fortunes of the American dream in Ohio, public and private leaders must work together to elevate the faltering fortunes of the family in the Buckeye State.

Dear MAGA voters:

President Donald Trump thanks you for your service, but he has determined you are now expendable. Please enjoy your Denny's omelet surcharge and keep buying MAGA merchandise and Trump family cryptocurrency!

If Trump was capable of honesty, that's the note his supporters would be getting.

It would be better than the "So long, suckers" message the president is sending via his administration's priorities and reckless actions.

Outside of some draconian actions on immigration and transgender rights, the kind of cruelty he promised his base, consider where we're at since Trump has taken office.

An unelected billionaire, Elon Musk, is ripping though the federal government like he owns the place, firing workers right and left, including thousands of veterans, while the Republican Congress just watches.

Trump has been musing about taking over Gaza and Greenland and the Panama Canal and Canada while siding with Russia and alienating America's strongest allies in Europe. His scattershot tariffs have created economic uncertainty, rattling the stock market and leading to economic reports like this, from Reuters:

"The Conference Board said consumer confidence deteriorated in February at its fastest pace in three-and-a-half years, with estimates for 12-month domestic inflation surging amid worries that U.S. tariffs on imports would raise prices for households."

Layoffs, jittery markets aren't going to help your grocery prices

On Tuesday, the head of Alcoa, a Pittsburgh-based aluminum company, said Trump's tariffs on aluminum imports could result in 100,000 job losses in the industry.

CEO William Oplinger said: "It's bad for American workers."

I'm sorry, but I was told electing Trump would be good for American workers. In fact, I was told specifically that food prices would swiftly go down and that the country would waltz into a new Golden Age.

Well, it's looking increasingly like that was – GASP! – a lie, and once Trump won the election and was able to do away with his myriad legal issues, he immediately abandoned the "forgotten men and women" he so sincerely promised to champion and went straight to helping himself.

Democratic Rep. Jim McGovern of Massachusetts summed it up on the House floor Tuesday while speaking out about a GOP budget that will, among other things, gut the Medicaid program many Trump voters rely on:

Trump got what he needed out of his voters. And assuredly, he'll still do his best to fleece the die-hards.

"We all saw this coming. ... Last month, Trump's inauguration, who was in the front row? It wasn't people on Medicaid. It wasn't factory workers. It wasn't nurses or teachers or firefighters. It wasn't even his own Cabinet. It was the richest people in the world."

For any forgotten men and women of America, that should have been a red flag. Trump had won on the backs of Americans who bought into his dishonest populist message. And since he got what he wanted, since he saved his own hide, the people who matter are clearly the ones with money.

So in comes Musk, deemed brilliant by virtue of wealth. His smug talk of "wokeness" and diversity, equity and inclusion might trigger the pleasure centers of MAGA supporters. But they're learning Musk's ax is swinging for necks that include their own.

Wait a minute, I didn't know DOGE might fire people I don't hate!

Consider what Fox News' Jesse Watters, a Trump toady if there ever was one, said after realizing that a friend of his – "a guy I met at a shooting event in New Jersey" – who is a 20-year military veteran about to get laid off from the Pentagon by Musk's Department of Government Efficiency, or DOGE:

"He texted me and he said, 'Jesse, you know, this isn't good. I'm upset. This is really sad.' And this guy is not a DEI consultant. This guy is not a climate consultant. This guy is a veteran. So when you're talking about DOGE-ing people, veterans should get priority. Because if you're going to go out there and kill enemies, put your life on the line for this country, you shouldn't be in the same category as people that are doing DEI."

Previously on Fox News, Watters had squawked excitedly about the DOGE firings, saying things like, "DOGE is dishing out spankings like 'Daddy Daycare,' " "There was a huge exodus over at the National Archives, persnickety librarians were getting DOGE'd silly," and "DOGE is a blessing from the heavens above."

You see how that works? It's all good when it somehow relates to Watters' definition of "others," but not when it involves someone he knows – one of those "real Americans," I suppose.

And of course he overlooks the fact that veterans have long been considered a part of the "diversity" in DEI.

Trump's con was apparent. Those who didn't see it are about to feel it.

As the tens of thousands of federal layoffs continue, Trump voters are going to feel the impact more acutely in their own communities and social circles.

We're talking about an enormous number of people about to be out of work, and there will be veterans and MAGA supporters among them, cast off from their jobs and forced to reckon with food prices that haven't gone down and federal services – like Medicaid – that may well dry up.

Trump got what he needed out of his voters. And assuredly, he'll still do his best to fleece the die-hards with dodgy crypto investments and any other thing he can slap his name on and sell.

But for all intents and purposes, he's done with you all. He cares only about the billionaires who line his Cabinet and his own personal fortune.

Seven decades after first becoming entranced by country music and Western culture, former Beatles drummer and storied rock frontman Ringo Starr made his Grand Ole Opry debut last week at age 84.

The moment occurred as he was the final artist presented onstage during an Opry taping that also featured Country Music Hall of Famer and Opry cast member Don Schlitz, other Opry cast members Lauren Alaina, Mandy Barnett, Riders in the Sky and Rhonda Vincent, Grammy-nominated country performer Mickey Guyton, and Starr’s Grammy, America and International Bluegrass Music Association award-winning recent “Look Up” album collaborator Molly Tuttle.

“As you may have noticed, I dressed up a bit tonight. I’m a cowboy inside. This is a great honor and an incredible moment for me. It’s just a dream to end up here,” Starr noted after stepping into the Opry’s vaunted circle, removing a white cowboy hat from his head and commencing to launch into a tight, three-song set.

The Grammy-winning multi-Hall of Fame-inducted icon performed his January 2025-released “Look Up” album ballad “Time On My Hands,” a jauntily countrified rock take on The Beatles’ cover of Buck Owens’ “Act Naturally” and a finale of a cover of The Beatles’ “With A Little Help From My Friends.”

The latter featured many artists who performed previously and guests, including rock icon T Bone Burnett (who produced and co-wrote much of “Look Up”), plus Country Music Hall of Famer and Grand Ole Opry member Ricky Skaggs.

Like much of last week in Nashville, the evening continued what is evolving into a 2025 that will honor the multi-generational, timeless impact of Starr, The Beatles and Starr’s All-Star Band on Music City.

On Friday evening’s Opry program, other highlights included the always cheekily humorous Riders in the Sky dusting off a cover of Canadian-born actor Lorne Greene’s six-decade-old country, easy listening and pop hit “Ringo.”

No, the song isn’t about the drummer.

Deep-tenor Greene, who portrayed the character of Ben Cartwright on the TV series “Bonanza,” instead sings the story of a notorious Old West gunslinger named Ringo.

Molly Tuttle also reprised a performance of The Beatles’ “Octopus’ Garden” from the recent Ryman Auditorium recording of a two-hour tribute to Starr that will air in March on CBS and Paramount+, while Many Barnett performed another Beatles favorite, the 1965 ballad “In My Life.”

Starr’s Opry appearance also follows the 2023-inducted Musicians Hall of Famer making a Wednesday appearance at the downtown Nashville venue to kick off their Julien’s Auctions-sponsored “Beats & Threads” exhibition, featuring Starr’s curated drum kits, sticks and snares, personal documents and stagewear.

A month ago, to kick off the release of his recently UK chart-topping country album “Look Up,” he appeared at country music’s Mother Church to record the “CBS presents Ringo and Friends at The Ryman” special.

Alongside event host T Bone Burnett, artists who took the stage included electric guitar wizard Jack White, Country Music Hall of Famers Paul Franklin, Emmylou Harris and Brenda Lee, award-winning and critically acclaimed modern stars Sheryl Crow, Rodney Crowell, Mickey Guyton, Sarah Jarosz, Jamey Johnson, Larkin Poe, Billy Strings and The War and Treaty.

The Academy Award winner and two-time Rock and Roll Hall of Fame inductee was surprised onstage with an invitation to play the Opry by his friend and Opry member Harris during that event.

The Tennessean noted the festivities “celebrated music that bears both glamour and grit because of the raw, cracking power and harmonic warmth of rock and roll’s roots in country, folk, jump blues and rockabilly music.”

Regarding the “Look Up” album itself, it significantly continues a career-long celebration of the performer’s love of how country music influences and inspires his artistry.

Evolving from performing and writing countrified material with The Beatles, including “Act Naturally,” “What Goes On,” “Rocky Raccoon” and “Don’t Pass Me By,” plus recording the solo “Beaucoups of Blues” country album in 1970 involves a conversation at a Los Angeles party in 2022 growing into Burnett and Starr pairing as collaborators and songwriters on “Look Up.”

That album’s undeniable authenticity has allowed the legend to finally go from being a young blues and country devotee who wanted to emigrate from London to Texas because of his love of bluesman Lightnin’ Hopkins to playing the Ryman Auditorium and Grand Ole Opry in the same six-week span.

As Starr smiled while holding his fingers aloft in a trademark peace sign standing amongst a superstar who’s who on the Opry’s stage on Friday night, it recalled a prior moment offered in a recent Tennessean interview about his career and the album’s creative process rang more valid than ever before.

“The heaviest (veteran) Nashville players and I had a good time making an album,” he said.

Author James Renner explores the dark side of Boy Scouts

Barbara McIntyre
Special to USA TODAY NETWORK - Ohio

"Scout Camp" by James Renner (Kensington)

More than 90,000 claims of sexual abuse have been leveled against the Boy Scouts of America, now rebranded as Scouting America. The resulting settlements drove the organization into bankruptcy.

One of the former Scouts who came forward with his account is James Renner, Akron author of "Scout Camp: Sex, Death, and Secret Societies Inside the Boy Scouts of America."

As an elementary school student, Renner attended camp at Seven Ranges Scout Reservation in tiny Kensington in Carroll County, and it was then he was first sexually abused, by another camper. Nevertheless, he willingly returned, enduring bizarre rituals and ceremonies with men who dressed as Native Americans and who demanded secrecy. The young Scouts were made to infer that if adults were doing it, it must be all right, and they were not allowed to tell their parents of the goings-on.

The summer of 1995 is the main part of the book. Renner became a counselor in training and was assigned to teach first aid to younger Scouts. The rituals continued, including lectures forbidding homosexuality and masturbation and instilling shame in the boys. In hindsight, it's easy to see how these young people were being manipulated to fear ostracism and retaliation if they refused to participate.

Another counselor told Renner: "This summer is cursed." And it seemed so, with continued abuse by adults, an apparent suicide and a destructive storm. One adult was particularly deplorable, committing rape and making pornography; sickeningly, he had the responsibility of "youth protection" for the camp.

The Boy Scouts, accused of protecting and enabling abusers, announced a compensation schedule for victims, with a sliding scale based on the nature of the abuse.

The system seemed to be designed to allow predators to victimize a new batch of boys every year, but there are courageous men who are willing to tell their stories.

Renner, a journalist and author of true-crime books including "The Serial Apprentice: And Other True Stories of Cleveland's Most Intriguing Unsolved Crimes" and "Amy: My Search for Her Killer: Secrets and Suspects in the Unsolved Murder of Amy Mihaljevic," never shies away from revealing his own involvement with cases; here, he acknowledges his personal mental health challenges and his history of addiction. He advocates the use of hallucinogens to treat addiction and post-traumatic stress disorder.

ASK CAROLYN | CAROLYN HAX

Family takes sides over nephew's engagement scoop

Carolyn Hax is away. The following first appeared Nov. 26 and 10, 2010.

Dear Carolyn: My daughter, "Emma," recently got engaged and posted it on social media. That same morning, her cousin got on the phone and told her grandmother about the engagement rather than waiting for the bride-to-be to tell her (the grandmother is not online).

Should I be offended that my nephew jumped the gun and told my mother before Emma could get a chance to call her and tell her?

I think my nephew could have kept his mouth shut for a couple of days until Emma had a chance to call her grandma. Am I being unreasonable?

— Getting Tired of It Being My Fault When I Get Offended by Their Lack of Consideration

Getting Tired of It Being My Fault When I Get Offended by Their Lack of Consideration: Completely unreasonable. The sole person responsible for this "lack of consideration" is Emma, who chose to scatter her news to the wind.

If your mother wasn't upset that she heard the news from your nephew, then no response on your part was necessary. If she was upset, then Emma was the one you needed to call, to note respectfully that Grandma was feeling left out.

Dear Carolyn: I feel stuck. My older brother is going through a divorce. He has been living at my parents' for the past four months. My husband and I are renting a side studio off the family house, so we are all real cozy. I have invited my brother into my social life since he has few friends in the area.

One of my friends and my brother have an undeniable attraction for each other. This makes me uncomfortable because my brother just filed his divorce papers last week, and because my friend throws herself at my brother whenever she is around him. I do not want to be the facilitator of a relationship that might go bad and have tried segregating my social events with them.

The past couple of weeks, however, "Kate" has ended up hanging all over my brother again. I do not respect the way she is "teasing" him and feel like she is using me to get to him. I do not want to be her friend anymore, but I feel like Kate and my brother may end up dating, and I do not want to be the [nasty] sister. His soon-to-be-ex-wife decided I am one of the many scapegoats for their marital problems, and I don't want to be in the same boat all over again.

— In the Middle Again

In the Middle Again: Your efforts to stay out of this boat may put you squarely back in it. I won't pretend it's fun to be used, as a scapegoat or a matchmaking venue. Neither one, however, is the same as being in the middle of someone else's drama. That happens when you accept a role for yourself and start playing it.

By taking deliberate action to keep your friend away from your brother, you are making that kind of choice. Your brother's divorce may be fresh, and dating now might not be your idea of sound relationship practice, and your friend might not be the woman you'd choose for him, but: None of these change the fact that he's an adult whose time is his own.

It's certainly OK for you, as Kate's host, to ask your brother how he feels about having her around so much. Make it clear that you know it's his business.

DEAR ABBY | ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Mother left out of group picture when nature calls

Dear Abby: After being married overseas, my daughter recently held a wedding reception stateside. My husband and his sister were able to attend the wedding. I could not because of serious business obligations, so I was really looking forward to the local reception.

My sister-in-law, who lost her husband 18 months ago, sat next to me and cried most of the evening. Since I don't see her often, I made a point of giving her my full attention. At the end of the dinner, I got up to use the restroom, which was located about 100 feet away. I was gone less than three minutes. I came back, and we left.

A few days later, my daughter posted a group photo from which I am absent. When I asked my husband about it, he replied, "You were in the bathroom." I am so hurt! He is supposed to be my advocate. Why didn't his sister say, "Let's wait for the mother of the bride"? Now I'm in none of the wedding pictures, and I feel betrayed by the people who should have stepped up for me at that important moment. I cried by myself for hours afterward. Should I keep my mouth shut since there's nothing I can do about it now, or point out how they left me feeling invisible?

Missing in California

Dear Missing: When you've gotta go, you've gotta go. Yes, it was thoughtless of your husband, his sister and the bride not to have noticed or questioned your absence when the photos were being taken. But bringing it up now will hardly make anyone feel better for the oversight. A more proactive stance would be to state that, in the FUTURE, if photos are taken, it might make sense to take a roll call. Then hope they take you up on it.

Dear Abby: As a child, I was verbally and emotionally abused by my only parent. I have written an unpublished book about my experiences. Would it be wrong to publish it while my abuser is alive? I would publish it using my real name. Other names I have changed in my writing.

For the last 15 years, I have not had a relationship with this parent. We live a continent apart. They never reached out even when I battled cancer. I guess I'm still feeling the effects of the conditioning from the abuse. I am 60 now, with a family of my own. My husband of 35 years and our children, as well as a sibling I am very close with, support my publishing the book. My sibling also suffered the same fate.

Survivor in the South

Dear Survivor: If you feel it would be cathartic to publish your autobiography, I encourage you to do it. HOWEVER, before doing it, consult an attorney so you can protect yourself should your abusive parent threaten to sue you for publicly unmasking them.

Dear Abby is written by Abigail Van Buren, aka Jeanne Phillips, and was founded by her mother Pauline Phillips. Contact Abby at www.DearAbby.com or P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, CA 90069.

Mental agility

Good play requires mental agility. To test yourself, answer these questions quickly:

If a red house is made of red bricks, and a blue house is made of blue bricks, what is a greenhouse made of?

What do you put in a toaster?

Say "silk" three times: silk, silk, silk. Spell it: s-i-l-k. Now, what do cows drink?

If you answered glass, bread and water (not green bricks, toast and milk), you may be more alert than most. As a further test, plan the play at today's six spades when West leads the queen of diamonds.

North improvised a strength-showing "reverse" to two hearts at his second turn. His bid was safe; if South raised, he would have five spades, and North could – and did – return to spades.

South took the ace of diamonds and wanted to ruff his two diamond losers in dummy. He ruffed one with the ten, cashed the ace of trumps, ruffed a club and ruffed a diamond with the king. Declarer then came to his queen of hearts and led the jack of trumps. East took the queen and led another diamond. South ruffed and drew the missing trump – and had none left. The hearts were blocked, and he lost another trick at the end.

South's thoughts were inefficient. To overcome the blockages, he ruffs the first diamond with dummy's king, ruffs a club and ruffs a diamond with the ace. South then leads the ten of trumps. If East wins and forces with a diamond, South can ruff, draw trumps and run the hearts.

A trump opening lead would beat six spades.

Going solo

Hit the slopes at these ski resorts great for singles

GETTY IMAGES

Mimi Slawoff
Special to USA TODAY 10Best
USA TODAY NETWORK

Ski trips with family or friends make excellent vacations, with everyone sharing space and stories from the slopes. But a solo ski vacation has many perks. For one, you can choose where to ski and hit the slopes on your own time. You can focus on personal goals without worrying if you're holding anyone else up (or waiting for them). And at the end of an active day, you can relax in a private room without distractions. It's bliss.

When skiing solo, you can book time with mountain hosts who can share the history of the mountain and trails. Pro tip: I always download a ski resort's app.

Another consideration when taking a solo ski vacation is access to village restaurants, sports rentals and shops. Having them close by can enhance ski vacations, especially when traveling alone.

Here are my picks for excellent ski resorts for singles and tips on making the most of your vacation.

Big Sky Resort, Big Sky, Montana

Big Sky Resort is large, with four mountains connected by chair lifts, and attracts families and groups with different skiing abilities. But it's equally enjoyable for solo skiers. Get the lay of the land on complimentary 90-minute mountain host tours led by volunteer skiers and riders who share area information (and maybe even their favorite spots to ski). Then, explore the mountain alone or join a group lesson to meet other adult skiers.

Snow tip: Make the most of your time with other activities, from laid-back snowshoe tours to thrilling guided headlamp night-skiing adventures.

Deer Valley Ski Resort, Park City, Utah

Deer Valley Ski Resort offers impeccably groomed slopes on four separate mountains and accommodates skiers of all abilities. For the ultimate ski vacation, enjoy pampering at this posh, skiers-only resort, where ski valets unload your skis curbside or ski butlers can deliver your rental gear (on-site rental shops are also available). An Olympic champion leads the resort's Women's Empowerment Ski Clinic. Deer Valley offers four complimentary mountain host tours daily.

Snow tip: If you really feel like treating yourself, stay at the ski-in/ski-out Stein Eriksen Lodge and book a treatment at the five-star spa.

Mammoth Mountain, Mammoth Lakes, California

Making friends on lifts, trails or clinics at friendly Mammoth Mountain is easy. It's clear why this is one of the best ski resorts in the country. Led by women, the three-day women's ski and snowboard camps foster girl time on the mountain while working on your goals. It includes five hours of daily lessons and an après-ski party. The coed Ripping Over 50 camps focus on health, fitness and daily ski or snowboard instruction.

Snow tip: Stay at Mammoth Mountain Inn or The Village Lodge for quick slope access.

Palisades Tahoe, Olympic Valley, Lake Tahoe, California

Home to the 1960 Winter Olympics and one of the best ski schools in the country, Palisades Tahoe offers ski clinics like Women of Winter Camp and the Masters Program to help you elevate your skills. Private mountain guides will also show you hidden areas and landmarks you might otherwise miss at the ski resort's 6,000-acres. After a day of swooshing, enjoy the après-ski scene in the village, where there's an outdoor fire pit, live music and numerous restaurants.

Snow tip: If you rent gear in the village, you can store your skis overnight for free in a building by Olympic House.

Powderhorn Mountain Resort, Grand Mesa, Colorado

This unassuming, friendly Powderhorn Mountain Resort is a hidden gem and one of the most affordable among Colorado's 28 ski areas and resorts. In no time, you'll be on a first-name basis with locals. Outdoor enthusiasts can enjoy a two-helmet day: Ski in the morning and ride a bike in the afternoon on the Lunch Loops trail near Grand Junction, a good home base with restaurants, breweries, wineries and affordable boutique hotels, like Hotel Melrose.

Schweitzer, Sand Point, Idaho

Schweitzer Mountain, Idaho's largest ski area with two distinct regions, boasts several activities for an exciting ski vacation. The Ski & Ride School offers guided half-day and full-day tours to show guests the best runs on the mountain. Backcountry snowcat skiing is an excellent opportunity for solo skiers and riders to hang out with a group. Outfitters like Girls with Grit offer women's ski clinics to elevate the skills of intermediate and advanced skiers/riders.

Snow tip: The village has restaurants and ski-in/ski-out hotels, including Humbird, which has in-room boot dryers. You can also book time to replenish at Cambium Spa.

SilverStar Mountain Resort, British Columbia, Canada

In addition to free host tours, SilverStar Mountain Resort offers Ladies' Day (every Tuesday) and Men's Day (Wednesdays). There's also Monday Masters for skiers ages 50 and over. These are great programs to enhance skills with fellow sports enthusiasts. If you're lucky , you may be riding a lift or skiing with resort ambassador Jacqui Cooper, an Olympic champion and retired freestyle skier.

Snow tip: Ride a snow cat to Paradise Camp for an elegant three-course dinner. The Den is a popular spot in the village for a bite and drink beneath the Town Hall restaurant.

Steamboat Resort, Steamboat Springs, Colorado

This authentic western ski town has fun activities on and off the mountain. Jumpstart your visit to Steamboat Resort with a mountain tour to explore the terrain. Ready to tackle moguls? Intermediate and advanced skiers can join Olympic medalist Nelson Carmichael for a free mogul clinic on the mountain. After skiing, ride a free city bus to town for a meal and to shop for Western apparel.

Snow tip: Book a Sweet Pea Tour shuttle to Strawberry Park Hot Springs, among the best hot springs in the country.

Stowe Mountain Resort, Stowe, Vermont

Stowe Mountain Resort includes Mount Mansfield (Vermont's highest peak) and Spruce Peak. These mountains offer diverse terrain and trails to explore independently or with like-minded skiers. Women and Wine (taught by top female coaches) offers support and fun lessons to skiers and snowboarders; an après gathering follows at Spruce Camp's West Lounge. The Village at Spruce Peak anchors the ski-in/ski-out Lodge at Spruce Peak for luxury stays, an outdoor skating rink, shops and restaurants.

You have to win lottery for this eagle tour in Michigan

Eric Seals
Detroit Free Press | USA TODAY NETWORK

The saying "money doesn't grow on trees" is true, but don't tell that to recent lottery winners dressed for the cold weather of January in Michigan. For them, just looking up to the skies or the nearby tree lines was their payoff, with between 80 and 150 eagles on the grounds of the DTE Energy power plant in Monroe on a recent Saturday.

Since 2008, DTE and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service have conducted an annual eagle tour for lottery winners. This unique experience allows participants to see our national bird, once a rare sight, at the power plant.

The eagles are believed to come down to this area from various parts of Canada, the Upper Peninsula and northern Lower Michigan to feed on fish in the warm waters of Plum Creek, warmed by the plant's water runoff while Lake Erie is frozen.

This year, the eagle lottery had 600 people apply for the morning and afternoon tours on the third Saturday in January. The 60 chosen for the two-and-a half-hour tours started indoors at the plant with a Q&A, including information about eagles feathers and talons. Then, they moved outside for a truly unique experience: being up close with the national bird.

"The thing that's special about it for me is the awe that lottery winners experience, given that we don't typically see eagles gather in numbers like this," said Maddie Drury, a park ranger for the Fish and Wildlife Service. She works to make sure all the lottery winners have a great experience.

Drury often walks around during the tour sharing facts about eagles with the bird watchers, discussing everything from their 6- to 8-foot wingspan, to their distinct white head and tail that appear between the ages of 4 to 5 years.

"I'm all about that visitor experience, and I'm absolutely thriving when others are thriving and I can use my knowledge about what's going on to really inspire or spark something in someone else. That's the whole job, that's where my passion is," said Drury.

Birders, using binoculars or their own cameras, focus on the tree line at Plum Creek. ERIC SEALS/DETROIT FREE PRESS

Kristen LeForce, a senior engineer with the environmental team at DTE, has spent the last decade helping with the plant tours. She wishes that the lottery could be expanded to other days for more to share the experience but, "because it's such a big ask for all the volunteers to come on a Saturday it's a big undertaking for all with the coordination on the plant's part and especially USFWS, but there's also an element of we want to keep it as wild as possible and not turn it into a big public viewing event."

Seeing a bald eagle in the wild, whether at the DTE Monroe plant, on Belle Isle, or elsewhere in Michigan or the country, is a memorable experience. These majestic birds were nearly extinct in the mid-1900s due to habitat loss, DDT pesticides, and other factors. They were saved by the Endangered Species Preservation Act of 1966 and the subsequent banning of DDT, leading to their remarkable comeback.

"This is a success story about a species that folks started to care about more and respond to. They're coming back, and we're seeing it right in front of us in big numbers. It's a success story we can see in real time in our backyards," said Drury.

LOVE and REAL ESTATE

Brendel Hightower Detroit Free Press | USA TODAY NETWORK

Ryan McNichol, 31, and Courtney McNichol, 29, have been together for five years. They tied the knot last April and will soon celebrate their first wedding anniversary. But before they said "I do," they made another legal commitment: They bought a house together. • "We knew we loved each other, enjoyed each other's company, and wanted to spend time together, so it just made sense," Courtney McNichol said (and Ryan McNichol agreed) about the purchase of their home in Madison Heights, Michigan, in 2022 while still dating. • They are part of a growing trend of couples who prioritized financial stability over marriage, opting for keys over rings. • "It's not necessarily a brand-new trend, but we're seeing more of it, in part because of affordability and the cost of buying a home continues to go up," said Jeanette Schneider, president and regional director of Re/Max of Southeastern Michigan. • In 2023, approximately 555,000 unmarried couples nationally reported purchasing a home within the past year, according to a Detroit Free Press analysis of Census Bureau data.

This marks a 46% increase from a decade earlier when just under 381,000 couples made similar purchases. The trend did dip a bit last year. According to the National Association of Realtors Profile of Home Buyers and Sellers 2024, married couples accounted for about 62% of all buyers, while single females made up about 20% and single males about 8%.

The share of unmarried couples buying homes together decreased slightly to about 6% in 2024. Rising housing costs and strained finances are contributing to this decadelong trend, with more couples combining resources.

A recent report from Realcomp, a multiple listing service that tracks real estate data, shows a 9.2% increase in the median sales price of a home, rising from $228,000 in January last year to $249,000 this year. The data excludes private sales. Meanwhile, the U.S. inflation rate rose by 3% over the 12 months ending in January.

Finding a place to call home

The McNichols turned to Rich Rubba of Real Estate One in Sterling Heights to navigate the competitive housing market.

The search was challenging. It took nearly two years to find the right home after looking at properties in Royal Oak, Ferndale, and surrounding areas in Michigan.

"It was brutal," Courtney McNichol said, recalling how homes in their price range were often bought with cash or sold for thousands over the asking price.

The couple toured more than 10 homes and faced multiple bidding wars before finally securing their current house.

Brian Cuddington, 45, and his girlfriend, Ann, who both grew up in White Lake Township, are taking a similar path. The couple, together for 10 years, are preparing to buy a home together in Ortonville as they move back to Michigan from Florida.

"This is our first home buying together," Cuddington said.

While they're making a long-term financial commitment, marriage isn't currently in their immediate plans, he added.

Joe Bigelman, from John Adams Mortgage in Troy, says he regularly sees unmarried couples buying homes together. "This is a big investment, and couples need to think through and talk about uncomfortable situations that could arise. I always recommend, speaking to an attorney."

Likewise, Schneider, of Re/Max of Southeastern Michigan, has advice for both unmarried couples and married couples purchasing a home together.

1. Have open financial discussions

Transparency is crucial. Discuss income, debts, credit scores and financial goals upfront to prevent surprises during the home-buying process.

2. Create a cohabitation agreement

A real estate attorney can draft a legally binding agreement outlining ownership percentages, expense responsibilities and contingency plans in case of breakups.

3. Determine how the property will be titled

The way a home is titled impacts ownership rights:

- Joint tenancy: Equal ownership with the right of survivorship, meaning the home automatically transfers to the surviving joint tenant.
- Tenants in common: Allows for unequal ownership shares, useful when partners contribute different amounts toward the down payment or mortgage.
- Sole ownership: Only one person is listed on the deed.

4. Plan for "what ifs"

Consider various situations, such as a partner relocating, variations in income and breakups and how they could affect the jointly owned property.

5. Understand mortgage options

Develop a mortgage application strategy that considers each partner's credit score, employment status and income. Generally, the partner with the stronger credit score will qualify for the best mortgage rate.

As home prices continue to rise, more couples are reshuffling the traditional timeline of life milestones. While marriage remains a goal for many, some are choosing to build financial security first.

For these couples, love isn't just about romance – it's about investing in a future together, one mortgage at a time.

What is the secret to buying that perfect bath towel?

Everyday Cheapskate
Mary Hunt

When asked to describe the perfect bath towel, most people would include the words "thick" and "thirsty."

Cotton Inc., a research and marketing company, agrees and goes on to say that the perfect towel can also stand up to constant use and laundering for at least a decade.

The secret to buying the perfect towel is in understanding fibers, loops and dyes, because unlike sheets, towels don't come with easy measures such as thread counts.

Cotton: A towel's main duty is to blot water. One hundred percent cotton does the best job, because cotton naturally attracts water. Synthetic fibers such as polyester repel water, making a cotton-polyester blend less absorbent and something to be avoided.

Quality: The quality of a towel is determined by where the cotton is grown and woven. Fabric weight is the outcome of how the fabric is woven. GSM, short for grams per square meter, is how much 1 square meter of fabric weighs. The higher the GSM number, the denser the fabric will be, which translates to higher quality and greater durability.

The highest quality towels are made of cotton grown and woven in Turkey, with 800 GSM.

Next come Egyptian cotton towels that have a weight of 300 to 600 GSM.

Pima cotton, grown in Arizona, California and a few countries outside the U.S., is exceptionally soft and absorbent and is typically woven at 300 to 700 GSM. Supima is a trade name for a particular type of pima cotton grown in the U.S.

Loops: If you look closely at terry cloth, you will see it is made up of a series of loops. The length of the loop determines the fabric's ability to absorb water. The longer the loop, the better the absorbency.

If those loops are shaved off or "cropped," the result is velour. While velour makes the towel feel velvety, losing the loops dramatically reduces a towel's ability to soak up water. A velour towel is pretty, but not so useful.

Short, dense loops result in a thinner towel, which some people prefer. Long, dense loops make the towel thicker, increasing its absorbency and durability.

Color: Dark-colored towels will fade over time, and that cannot be avoided. If you want colored towels, opt for light colors. The best option, however, is always to go for white. You'll simplify the laundering process and never have to worry about colors fading. Besides, white goes with everything. All the hand towels and face cloths match all the bath towels. White bath linens never go out of style.

Price: The average price of a medium-weight cotton towel is around $7, but it can go as high as $30 or more for a high-end Turkish towel.

Care: Bath linens are exposed to soil, oil and skin cells and germs. For good health, towels should be laundered in hot water (at least 120 F) with detergent and a small amount of borax (I use 2 tablespoons per wash load). Only occasionally and as needed, use chlorine bleach. You cannot do that safely with colored towels, but high-quality white towels can take the most vigorous laundering and keep looking good year after year.

For bath linens, avoid using any fabric softeners in the washer or dryer as they contain silicones that will coat the loops and make the towels virtually water repellent.

Think of buying towels as a 10-year investment. Once you know how to determine the right towel for you, wait for those towels to go on sale. Then buy the most quality you can afford.

TWIRLING TURTLES

Study reveals more about their sense of navigation

Dinah Voyles Pulver USA TODAY

When a hatching sea turtle first pokes its head above the sand and scrambles to the sea, a watching child might ask how the turtle knows where to go and how girl turtles know to come back one day to a nearby beach to lay their eggs. • Even sea turtle scientists don't yet fully understand how the turtles use the sense of direction and navigation that helps them survive and return to nest on a beach near where they hatched. Two papers published this month, however, show researchers are getting closer to solving some of the questions that have puzzled them for years. • In one study, published Wednesday in the science journal Nature, a crew of dancing loggerhead sea turtles revealed more about how they learn to use magnetic fields.

Sea turtles

Researching these skills more could one day offer humans clues to help improve our own navigation, said Kayla Goforth, a postdoctoral fellow at Texas A&M University and lead author of the study with seven research partners.

The other study, by a group of scientists at the University of Central Florida, shows young turtles may travel more deliberately to find food and safety than had been thought.

Animal magnetism

Many animals use magnetic sensing to find their way and to migrate, including birds, salamanders, butterflies and fish, said Goforth, who led the study while completing graduate work at the University of North Carolina. "It seems like we're constantly discovering more and more animals that have a magnetic sense. It's a widespread ability across the whole animal kingdom."

Goforth's research team found loggerhead turtle hatchlings can be conditioned to recognize magnetic fields, which allows them to return to the same feeding sites year after year or to the nesting site where they first emerged, she said.

No one had ever demonstrated whether turtles could learn magnetic fields, she said. In this study, hatchling loggerheads from a North Carolina beach were taken back to the laboratory and kept in aquarium tanks with separate magnetic fields replicating actual magnetic signatures in two ocean locations. They were conditioned by finding food in only one of the locations over two months.

The young turtles learned to distinguish the field where they found food, a gel mixture with fish flakes and nutrients, she said. They also received "an extra reward of squid and shrimp" when they returned to the location.

When they arrived in the spot where they expected to find food, the turtles would dance in anticipation, the study reported, tilting their bodies vertically, raising their heads near or above the water's surface, alternatively paddling with their flippers and sometimes spinning in place.

Not magic, but magnetic

The study demonstrates that magnetic fields may help the turtles "get back to the same feeding areas, just like we might return to our favorite pizza place again and again, but we learn a street address," Goforth said. The biologists used a magnetic coil system with an electric current running through it to re-create the magnetic fields the turtles associated with the food.

After the first experiment, Goforth said, researchers were amazed the turtles had learned to return to the same spot. After a second group of hatchlings demonstrated the same ability, the scientists were "really excited." The turtles even remembered the location four months later.

The experiment was the first to provide strong evidence that a sea turtle could learn to associate a magnetic field with food, she said. In the ocean, successful foraging may prompt a turtle to notice and remember the "signature" of a feeding area.

The young turtles, about the size of a dinner plate, were released into the sea about a year after they were collected.

The two-part study also exposed sea turtle hatchlings in Melbourne Beach, Florida, to radio frequency fields to determine how that might affect their magnetic senses. "We have eyes for visual sense and noses for smelling," Goforth said. "Turtles have a magnetic sense. We don't know what that structure is yet.

"Figuring that out, it's kind of the last sense that we know of right now that we don't understand," she said. If researchers can understand how animals can navigate with magnetic fields, "then we could possibly develop our own technology that uses magnetic fields for navigation as opposed to satellites."

Determined swimmers, not passive drifters

In the study off Florida's West Coast, researchers with the University of Central Florida's Marine Turtle Research Group tracked the movements of four species of wild-caught juvenile sea turtles by satellite signals from tiny GPS tags from 2011 to 2022. The resulting study, published in the journal Proceedings of the Royal Society B: Biological Sciences, showed young turtles are active swimmers during their early lives rather than passive drifters.

"We've had massive data gaps about the early baby to toddler life stages of sea turtles," said Kate Mansfield, a marine scientist at UCF and director of the turtle research group. "This part of their long lives has been largely a mystery."

Researchers had thought juvenile sea turtles stayed far offshore, where it might be safer for them than closer in, where birds, sharks and big fish lurk. This study found that turtles were swimming back and forth between the shallower waters, approaching the shore then turning away to avoid it.

Understanding the movement patterns can help guide conservation efforts to protect crucial habitats for sea turtles, said Katrina Phillips, who led the study with Mansfield and Nathan Putman, an ecologist at LGL Ecological Research Associates in Texas. They compared the movement patterns of the turtles with passive drifting devices that were released with the turtles.

Historically, information about the young life stage of turtles was limited to sightings of opportunity – which can be challenging when trying to spot tiny hatchlings from passing boats, Mansfield said. The study showed that this stage of a turtle's life, which has been called "the lost years," is more complex than assumed.

This hatchling loggerhead sea turtle helped researchers learn how wild sea turtles navigate and find food, in a study led by Kayla Goforth at the University of North Carolina and Texas A&M University. PROVIDED BY KEN LOHMANN

a NEW ocean

Scientists predict part of Africa will eventually separate

Trevor Hughes USA TODAY

Millions of years from now, northern Africa could be home to a new ocean, as tectonic plates pull apart along the East African Rift System, according to scientists. • Experts have long known that portions of the continent are separating by as much as 0.3 inches a year in some places. Volcanic and geologic evidence in Ethiopia and elsewhere in Africa indicates the existing oceans may one day spill into the growing rift, severing a small portion of the continent from the greater bulk of Africa, according to experts.

"The region encompassing the Afar Depression and Red Sea and Gulf of Aden spreading centers is thought to broadly be the final transition away from continental rifting to the development of true oceanic spreading in the eastern Gulf of Aden and the Red Sea," scientists wrote in a 2024 study.

Scientists aren't 100% certain a new ocean will form, but they say the geologic implications of the plates pulling apart indicate it's likely. A similar process created the nearby Saudi Arabian peninsula, according to scientists.

Scientists use GPS and satellite mapping to track how the tectonic plates underlying Africa are separating, specifically in the region known as Afar, which includes northern Ethiopia, Djibouti and Eritrea.

"Geologists believe that, if spreading continues, the three plates that meet at the edge of the present-day African continent will separate completely, allowing the Indian Ocean to flood the area and making the easternmost corner of Africa (the Horn of Africa) a large island," according to federal scientists with the U.S. Geological Survey.

Research indicates that the plates in the area are being pushed apart in part by magma rising up from deep in the Earth, creating a measurable bulge and cracks where the rocks are separating. Other factors are at play, including the amount of water underlying the area, according to some studies.

Estimates put the timing of the possible new ocean at somewhere between 1 to 20 million years from now. That's quite fast on a geological scale, and many scientists are researching the changes, which are particularly visible because they're on land and not under one of the oceans.

How plate tectonics work

The earth we stand on sits atop large masses known as tectonic plates. Those plates are variously pulling apart, smashing together or sliding horizontally past each other, unleashing volcanoes and earthquakes as a sign of the movement.

You often find geological features like rift valleys, volcanoes and geysers in areas where plates are pulling apart. And you find mountains where they are coming together, like the Himalayas, which were created sometime around 40 to 50 million years ago as the Indian and Eurasian landmasses collided. That collision is still driving action: the Himalayas are growing roughly 0.4 inches annually, according to the USGS.

In California, the San Andreas fault sits between the North American plate, which is sliding south, and the Pacific plate, which is sliding north. At some point, experts fear, California will suffer "the Big One," a devastating earthquake that will cause widespread destruction in San Francisco, Los Angeles and other areas.

Iceland sits atop a rift similar to northern Africa's, and it's possible to scuba dive into a lake formed between the separating areas.

The last time we got a new ocean

Without much fanfare – or geological upheaval – we last got a new ocean in 2021, when National Geographic Society scientists formally recognized the Southern Ocean encircling Antarctica as a distinct body of water. U.S. scientists had considered it a distinct ocean for decades, but it took the 2021 recognition by the society to spur more widespread acceptance.

That recognition gave it the same stature as the Atlantic, Pacific, Indian and Arctic oceans. Experts say the Southern Ocean was formed about 30 million years ago when the land masses of Antarctica and South America separated, creating the narrow and turbulent Drake Passage where the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans join.

Medora Lee USA TODAY

It's a good time to be an older American, at least for taxes. • There are two items that only older adults can use to save a little this year and, maybe, a little extra next year on taxes. • Americans ages 65 years and older can claim the extra standard deduction this year, and some ages 60 to 63 can set themselves up now for even more savings in 2026 using super catch-up contributions. • Both of these help seniors reduce their taxable income, which could mean less tax to pay and more money in their wallet.

Americans ages 60 to 63 have an opportunity to rev up their retirement savings with a supersized catch-up contribution that can help reduce their taxable income when they do their taxes next year.

What is the standard deduction?

When filing taxes, everyone can reduce their taxable income by choosing between a fixed amount, called the standard deduction, or itemizing if their deductions are greater than the standard deduction.

Everyone's standard deduction amounts for tax year 2024 are:

- $29,200 – married filing jointly or qualifying surviving spouse
- $21,900 – head of household
- $14,600 – single or married filing separately

What's the extra standard deduction?

People 65 or older or blind get an additional deduction, which varies depending on filing status, whether they or their spouse is at least 65, and whether they or their spouse is blind. Here's how it works:

- $1,950 for single or head of household or blind taxpayer
- $1,550 for married taxpayers (per qualifying person) or qualifying surviving spouse or blind taxpayer

That means, for example, a single person who is 65 or older or blind would have a total standard deduction of $16,550 ($14,600 standard deduction plus $1,950 extra standard deduction).

Or a married couple of two 65-plus adults would take a total deduction of $29,200 (standard deduction) plus $1,550 for one 65-or-older adult plus $1,550 for a second 65-plus adult, equaling $32,300.

For people 65 years or older and blind, their additional standard deduction would equal the sum of the additional amounts for both age and blindness.

- $3,900 if they are single or filing as head of household
- $3,100 per qualifying individual if they are married, filing jointly or separately

For tax year 2024, the IRS considers people 65 years old if they were born before Jan. 2, 1960. Taxpayers are allowed an additional deduction for blindness if they were blind on the last day of the tax year. The IRS has specific guidelines for what is considered blind.

What is the super catch-up contribution?

In 2025, for the first time, Americans ages 60 to 63 by the end of the calendar year have an opportunity to rev up their retirement savings with a supersized catch-up contribution that can help reduce their taxable income when they do their taxes next year.

Catch-up contributions for participants ages 50 and up in workplace plans, including 401(k)s, 403(b)s, governmental 457 plans and the federal government's Thrift Savings Plan, are $7,500.

That means their total contribution for 2025 is capped at $31,000 (the standard deferral cap for everyone of $23,500 plus a $7,500 catch-up contribution).

But thanks to the Secure Act 2.0 that passed at the end of 2022, employees ages 60 to 63 who participate in one of those work plans have a higher catch-up contribution limit starting this year. That cap is $11,250 instead of $7,500, which brings the maximum amount of deferrals allowed to $35,000.

Keep in mind, when a taxpayer turns 64, the catch-up contribution limit reverts to the regular cap of $7,500.

Not all employers may be offering these supersized contribution limits yet, though.

"Technically, there is no law that says that employers must offer a super catch-up contribution, so I believe an employer's retirement plan must be amended to specifically allow for a super catch-up contribution," said Richard Pon, a certified public accountant in San Francisco.

Taxpayers should ask their employers. If the company doesn't offer those contributions yet, lobby for it, experts say.

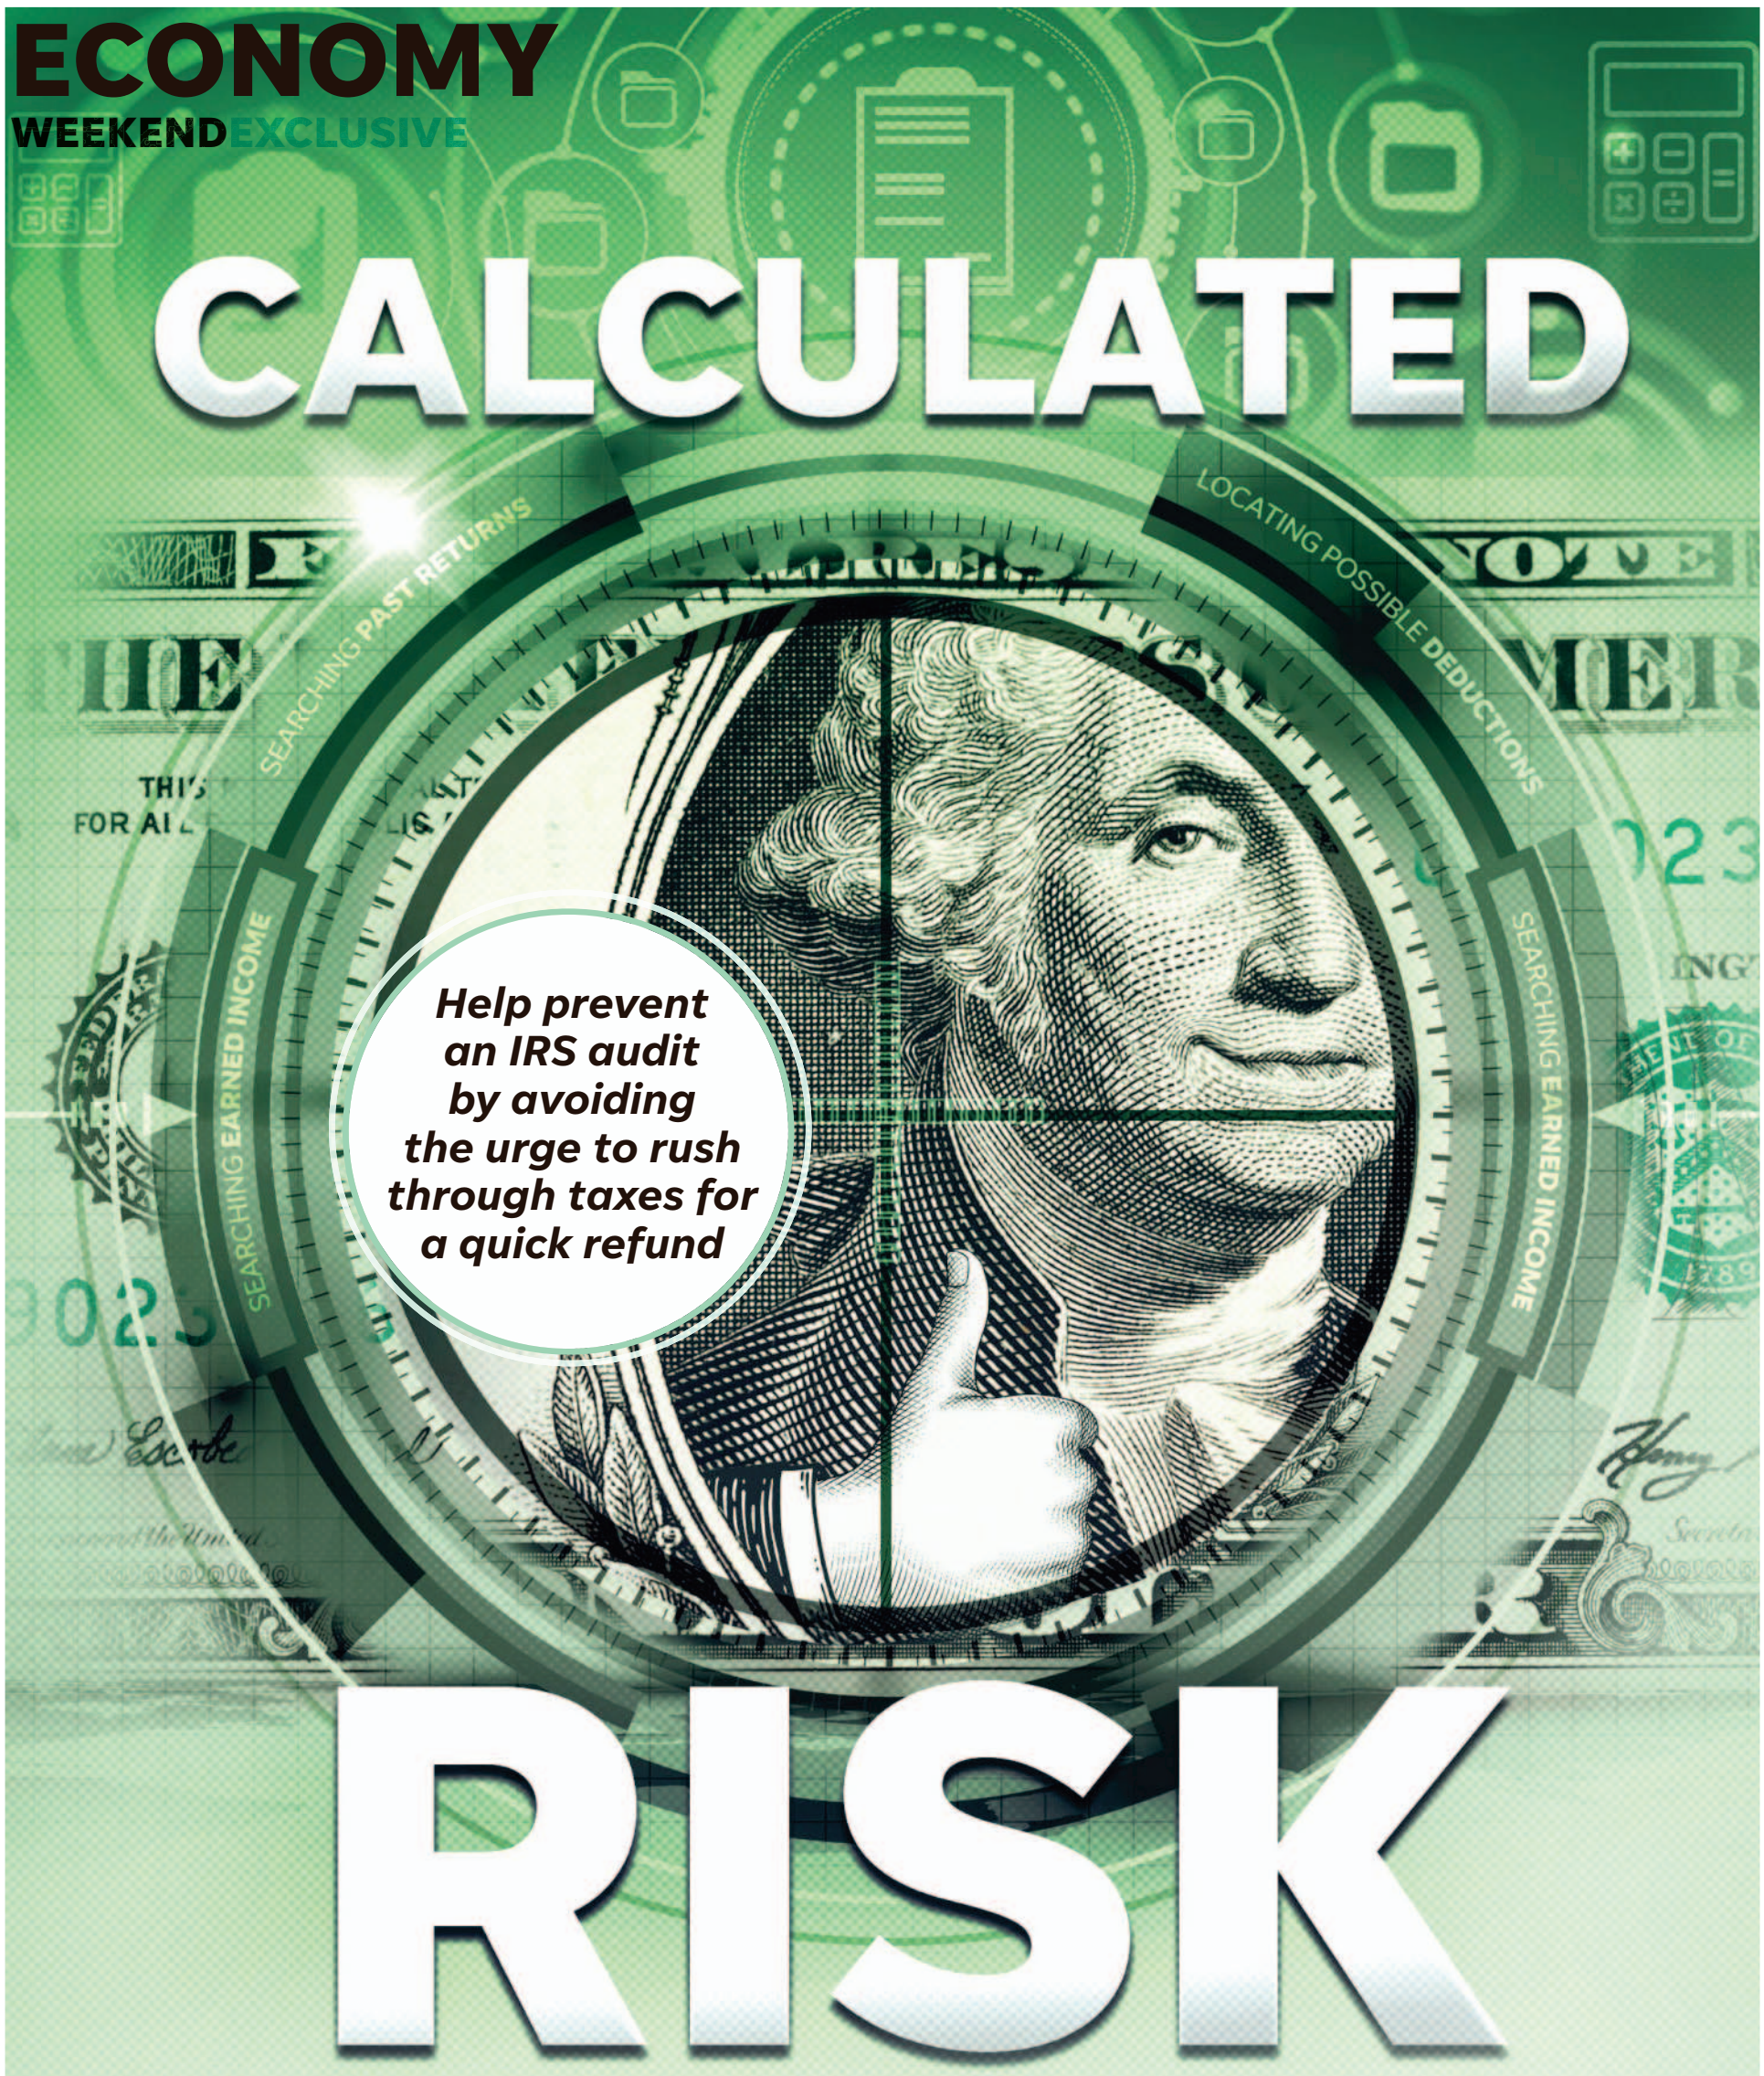

Not only would the higher cap allow eligible employees to lower their taxable income, but "increased savings during key pre-retirement years could help some who haven't been able to save as much earlier in their careers," financial services firm Voya said.

CALCULATED RISK

Help prevent an IRS audit by avoiding the urge to rush through taxes for a quick refund

Medora Lee USA TODAY

Many Americans think rushing through their taxes will get them a refund sooner. • In most cases that may be true, but what really works best is doing your taxes right, experts say. • If something doesn't add up or match – whether intentionally or by accident – you run the risk of getting audited, they said. • When you're audited by the federal Internal Revenue Service, it means your return was selected from a batch of returns for a closer inspection. • This happens because your tax filing was among those that showed the "highest potential noncompliance," according to the IRS. • The easiest way to avoid an audit is to slow down and be "accurate, honest and modest," said Eric Scaringe, principal at certified public accounting firm UHY.

Question: What triggers an IRS audit?

Answer: Mismatches.

"One thing tax jurisdictions like more than money is information," Scaringe said. "They look for mismatches, and use AI (artificial intelligence) tools to find it and send autogenerated notices. That's low-hanging fruit."

For instance, make sure you enter your information from your W-2 income tax form correctly so it's consistent with the income that's stated on official income tax documents like a 1099 or W-2, said Erin Collins, national taxpayer advocate at an independent organization within the IRS that works for taxpayers. Otherwise, you can expect an IRS inquiry.

Collins also recommends parents discuss who will be claiming a child on their return if they file separate returns. They should also ensure additional caretakers like grandparents don't try to claim a child on their return if they don't meet the IRS' requirements for doing so.

Otherwise, an audit may be triggered if multiple people try to claim the same child as a dependent.

People often get tripped up on the earned income tax credit, or EITC, because IRS records show a child claimed by the taxpayer does not meet the relationship or residency test to be considered a qualifying child, Collins said.

How does the IRS choose whom to audit?

IRS audits can also commonly be triggered through a random selection process in which a computerized system compares your return "against 'norms' for similar returns," the IRS said in an online post.

For example, a freelancer earning $100,000 might typically have $5,000 in travel costs. "If you're out there and wrote $50,000 in travel costs, that's way outside the mean someone would deduct," said Mark Jaeger, vice president of tax operations at preparer TaxAct. "The IRS would flag that because you're an outlier."

Another trigger for an audit is if the information on your return is connected to someone else's, such as a business partner or investor, that is being audited.

Who gets audited by the IRS the most?

In terms of income levels, the IRS in recent years has audited taxpayers with incomes below $25,000 and above $500,000 at higher-than-average rates, according to government data.

In May, the IRS said it's working on increasing audits by more than 50% on wealthy individual taxpayers with total income above $10 million. It forecasts audit rates in this group to rise to 16.5% in tax year 2026 from 11% in 2019. Over that same period, the agency said it won't increase the "historically low levels" of audits for small businesses and taxpayers making under $400,000.

What is the probability of being audited by the IRS?

For all returns filed for tax years 2013 through 2021, the IRS said in its 2023 Data Book, it has audited 0.44% of individual returns filed.

Low-income wage earners taking the EITC were 5.5 times more likely to be audited than anyone else "because they are easy marks in an era when IRS increasingly relies upon correspondence audits yet doesn't have the resources to assist taxpayers or answer their questions," the report said.

How does the IRS notify you of an audit?

You'll initially be contacted by snail mail. The IRS will provide all contact information and instructions in the letter you'll receive.

If the IRS conducts the audit by mail, it'll ask you for more information about certain items on your tax return, such as income, expenses and itemized deductions.

If you have too many books or records to mail, you can request a face-to-face audit and the agency will provide contact information and instructions in the letter you receive.

How far back can the IRS audit you?

Typically, the IRS can include returns filed within the past three years in an audit. If it finds a "substantial error" it can add years, but it usually doesn't go back more than the past six years.

What should you do if you get audited?

If you receive an audit notice, you generally have 30 days to respond. Take that time to read the letter carefully to understand what the IRS is requesting. Not all notices are audits, and not all are related to your latest tax return.

Whatever you do, don't ignore the IRS. Failure to comply could result in additional interest and penalty charges for late response or providing incomplete information, or losing your right to challenge the finding, Collins said.

Beat those winter blues

How to protect your mental health from seasonal depression

Jenna Prestininzi Detroit Free Press | USA TODAY NETWORK

With spring still weeks away, winter's dark and cold days may leave you feeling down, but experts say there are ways to improve your mental health. ● The winter season's shorter days and less sunlight often bring negative mental health effects, whether just minor "winter blues" or more serious mental health conditions, according to the National Institutes of Health. ● "As the days get shorter, many people find themselves feeling sad. ● You might feel blue around the winter holidays, or get into a slump after the fun and festivities have ended. ● Some people have more serious mood changes year after year, lasting throughout the fall and winter when there's less natural sunlight," the NIH website said. ● Here's what to know.

What mental health concerns arise in winter?

During winter, people typically experience higher rates of mood decline from adjusting to the time change and reduced hours of daylight, according to the American Psychiatric Association.

About 5% of American adults may develop seasonal affective disorder, or SAD, a type of depression.

In Michigan, for example, SAD may impact 20% to 40% of people, according to Hanne Hoffmann, assistant professor at Michigan State University's College of Agriculture and Natural Resources

What are common symptoms of winter depression?

SAD can be characterized by the following symptoms, experts with the Mayo Clinic say:

- Feeling sad most of the day, nearly daily
- Thoughts of not wanting to live
- Sleeping too much
- Loss of interest in activities
- Overeating, weight gain
- Difficulty concentrating
- Low energy, sluggish
- Thoughts of worthlessness, guilt, hopelessness

Some people are at a higher risk for developing SAD during the winter, according to the American Psychiatric Association. Among those who see higher rates of the disorder are women, Midwesterners and people in rural areas.

How can you combat winter depression?

While the seasonal blues can be a challenge, there are things you can do to keep your mental health in good spirits.

Here are some tips from experts at AARP, the Hospital for Special Surgery and Brown University Health:

- Follow a healthy sleep routine
- Bundle up and go for a walk
- Join a book club
- Meditate
- See a therapist
- Go on a wellness retreat
- Volunteer in your community
- Limit your media consumption
- Spend time with pets or visit a zoo or cat café
- Eat a healthy, balanced diet
- Host cooking or dinner parties
- Keep a journal
- Maintain social connections

AGING EYES

Many older adults are at risk of developing macular degeneration

Daryl Austin
USA TODAY

Many of us are painfully aware of our body's increasing number of shortcomings as we get older. ● Sagging skin, hearing loss, receding hairlines and a tendency to use the bathroom more frequently than we used to. ● But one of the most dreaded adverse outcomes is that of diminishing eyesight. ● Reduced vision, also known as vision impairment, is so common that research shows nearly 30% of U.S. adults 71 and older have it. ● While many factors can contribute to it, the leading cause of vision loss in older adults is age-related macular degeneration, according to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Office of Disease Prevention and Health Promotion. ● Here's what macular degeneration is, what causes it and how you can expect it to be treated if it affects you or a loved one.

What is macular degeneration? What is AMD, wet AMD?

Macular degeneration, also known as age-related macular degeneration or AMD, is an incurable eye disease that damages the middle part of the retina that's known as the macula, "which is responsible for our central, detailed vision," explained Laura Di Meglio, an assistant professor of ophthalmology at the Wilmer Eye Institute at Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine.

When this area of the eye is damaged, it leads to a gradual loss of sharp central vision, seeing dark spots, distorted or wavy vision and difficulty seeing colors. In these ways, "AMD can severely impact quality of life by making it harder to see fine details even though it doesn't cause total blindness," says Inna Lazar, a Connecticut-based optometrist and founder of Greenwich Eye Care.

Some such adverse impacts include difficulty driving or with close-up activities like reading, writing, cooking, sewing or fixing things around the house. People with AMD can even have problems recognizing faces, Lazar said.

Symptoms vary, though, as there are two types of AMD: dry AMD and wet AMD.

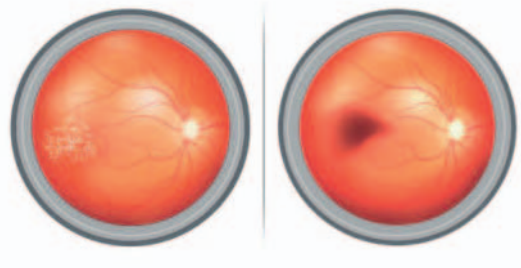

"Dry AMD is very common, with about 80% of people with AMD having this form," said Dr. Purnima Patel, an ophthalmologist at ORA Vision in Georgia and spokesperson for the American Academy of Ophthalmology. It is characterized by the macular gradually getting thinner with age. "Wet AMD is less common, but affects sight much quicker," Patel said. It occurs when abnormal blood vessels grow in the back of the eye and damage the macula.

What causes macular degeneration?

More than 20 million Americans have AMD, per the American Macular Degeneration Foundation, but your risk of developing it significantly increases with age. Aging is the single biggest contributor of AMD, in part, because cell regeneration slows down as we get older, which is one of the highest risk factors associated with diminished eyesight.

Several other factors are also thought to contribute to the development of AMD. These include a family history of the condition, your race – Caucasians have been shown to be at higher risk, Patel says – and environmental factors such as "smoking, excessive UV exposure, poor diet, high blood pressure and obesity, all of which can damage the delicate blood vessels that nourish the macula," Lazar said.

How is macular degeneration prevented and treated?

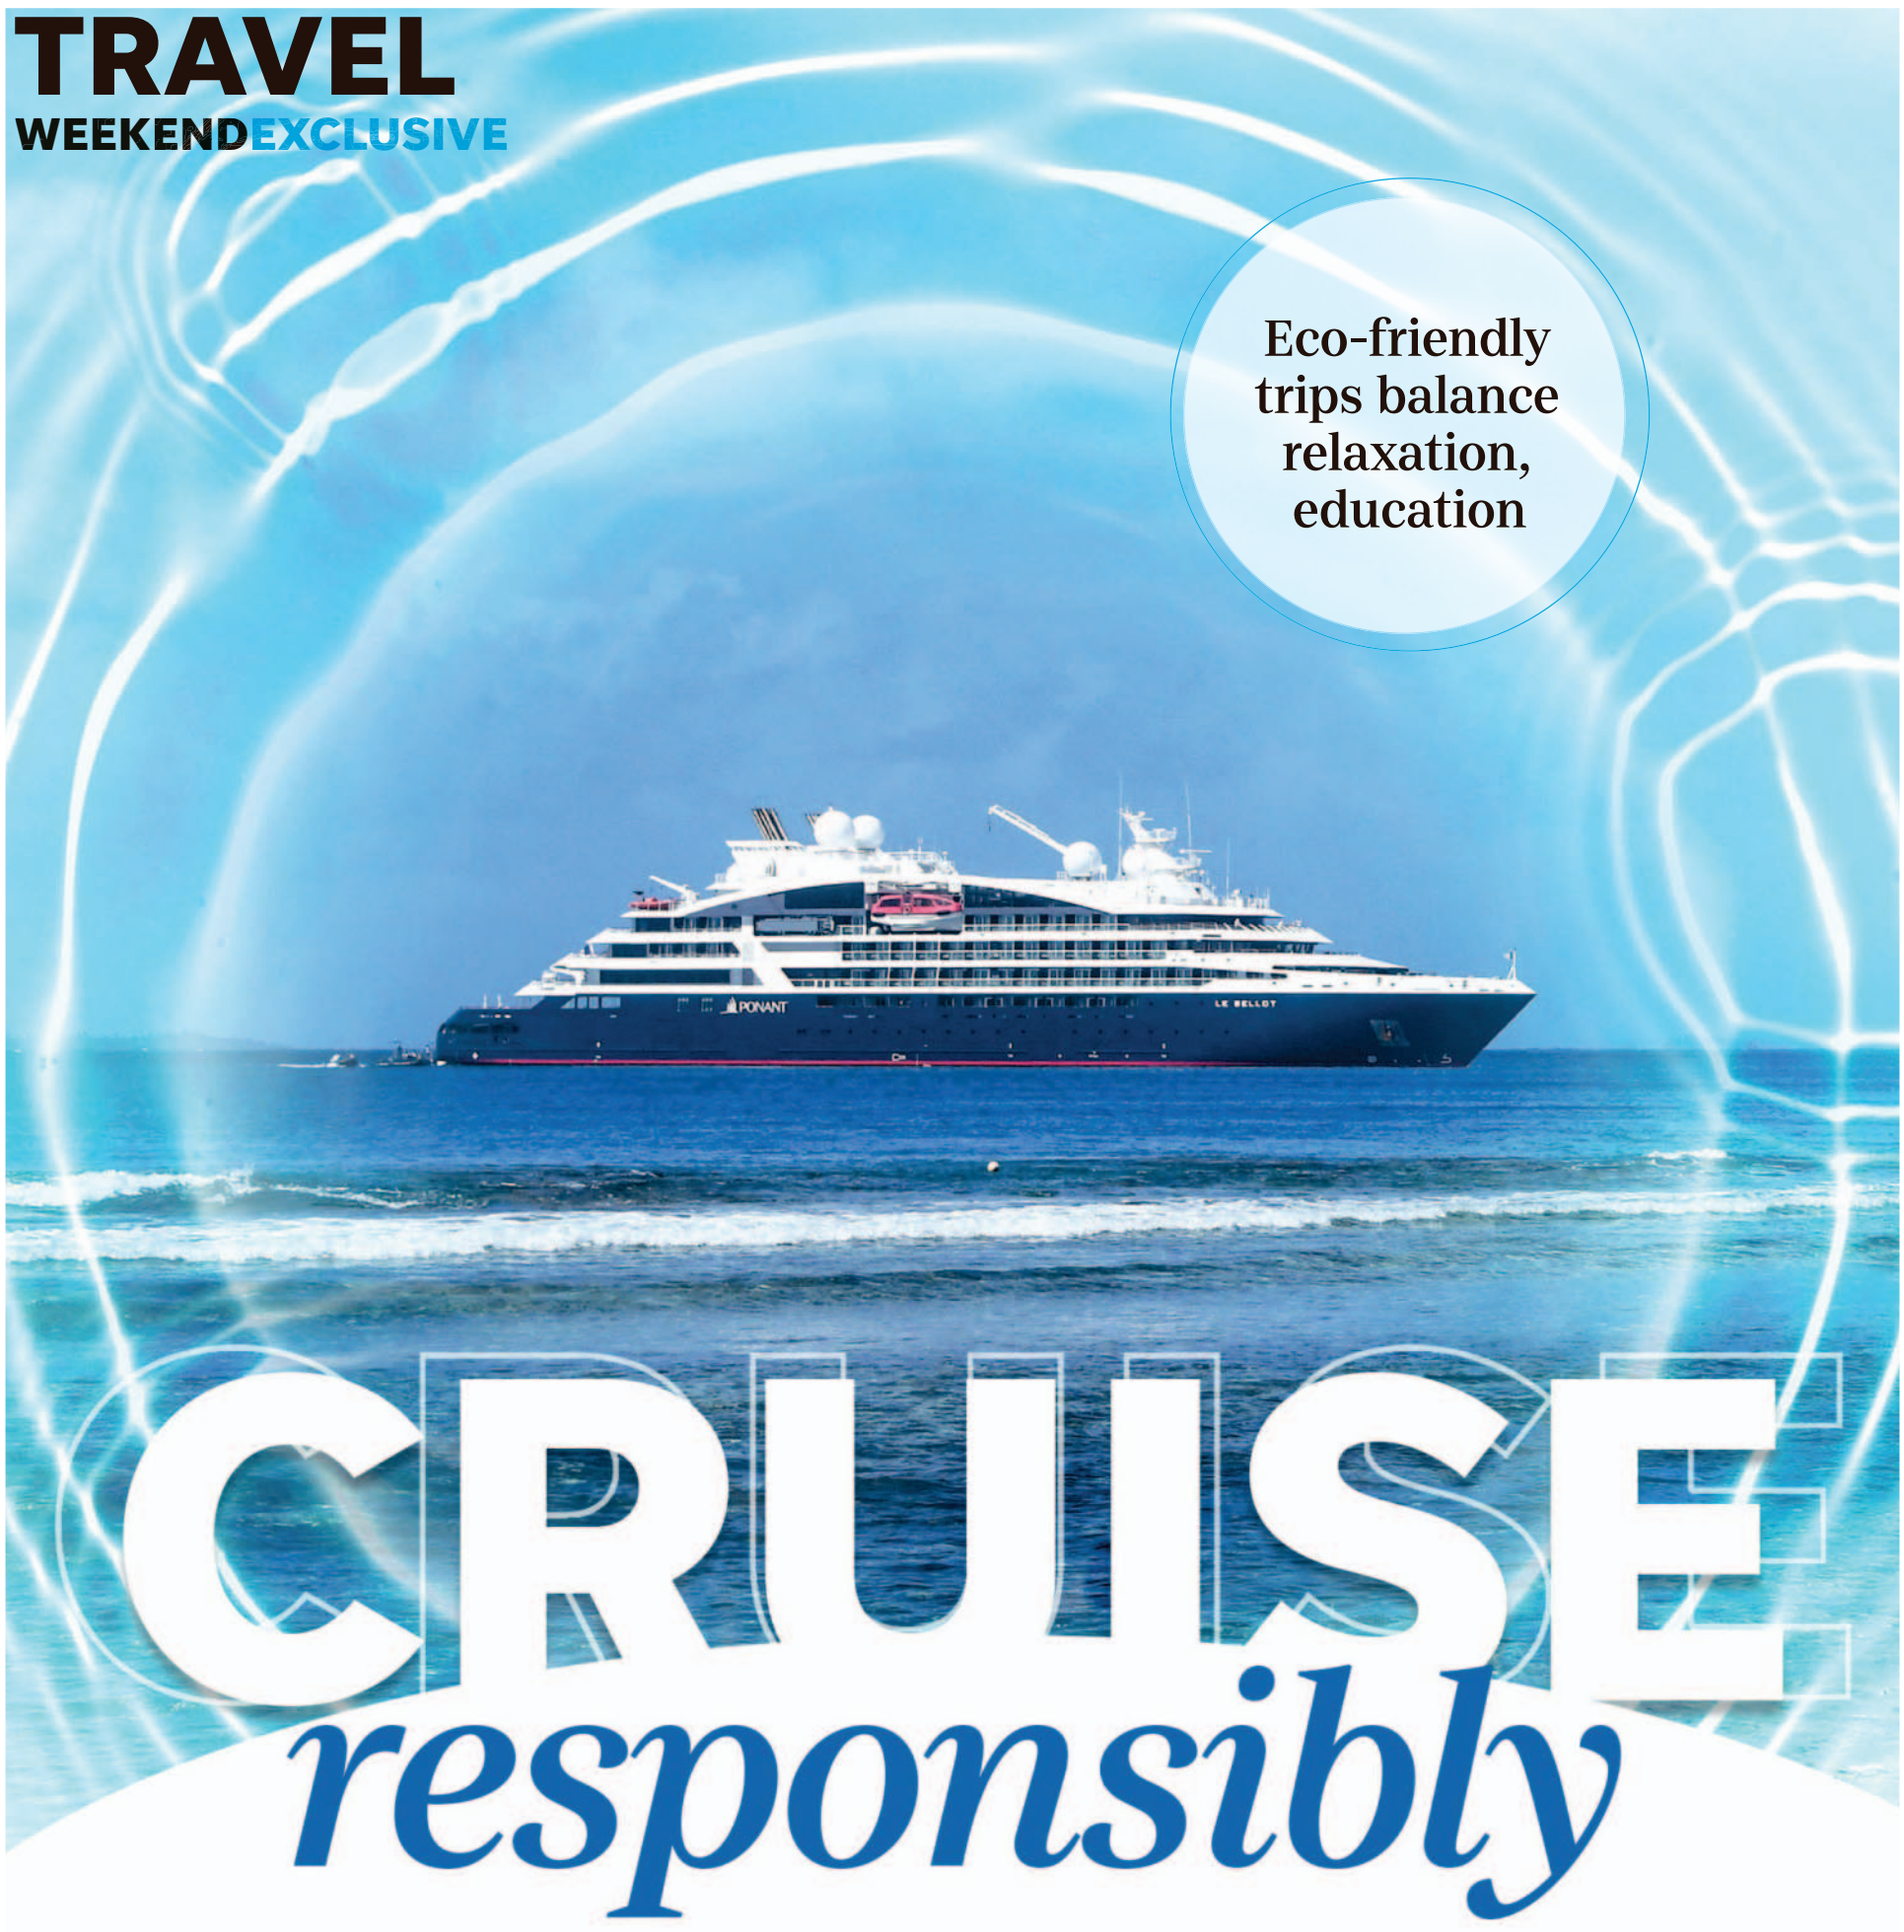

No matter which associated risk factors you may be facing, there are ways of preventing, or at least diminishing, the worst outcomes of the condition. These include "making healthy lifestyle and dietary choices like eating leafy greens and omega-3s, quitting smoking, staying active and keeping your blood pressure in check," Lazar said.

Once AMD has been diagnosed, a handful of treatment options are available depending on which type of AMD you're dealing with. "To treat wet AMD, ophthalmologists usually use medications called anti-VEGF drugs," said Patel. She explains that anti-VEGF drugs are delivered through a very thin needle and can help stop the leaking of the vessels. "This can slow or stop worsening of the vision and can often even improve vision," she explained.

It's best to consult with your eye care professionals about the best courses of action, especially if you notice symptoms worsening. "It is important for patients with macular degeneration to routinely check their vision in each eye," added Di Meglio, "and to notify their eye care provider if they notice any changes, as quick treatment can help prevent further irreversible damage."

Eco-friendly trips balance relaxation, education

CRUISE responsibly

Kathleen Wong USA TODAY

Everyone gathered on deck, not minding the hot Panamanian sun beating down, to experience a bucket list item: crossing the Panama Canal. ● We started the day in the Atlantic Ocean and were in the Pacific Ocean by dinnertime. ● The night before, passengers aboard my ship, Le Bellot, were buzzing about the long-awaited event – the excitement was palpable. ● I knew before embarking on the January sailing of Panama and Costa Rica by Sea: The Natural Wonders of Central America – a cruise offering by the French small-ship cruise operator Ponant in partnership with Smithsonian Journeys – that transiting through what's considered one of the world's most impressive engineering feats would be worthwhile. ● However, my experience on the trip gave me a deeper understanding of why it rightfully captured everyone's attention.

The day prior, I attended a lecture by former diplomat and U.S. Navy officer Hugh Neighbor, one of two Smithsonian Journeys experts on my trip, about the history and significance of the canal. During an onshore excursion at the Biomuseo in Panama City, I learned why the country's unusual geographical shape as an isthmus made it the perfect place to connect two oceans.

This intimate yacht-style cruise is immersed in the vibrancy of Panama and Costa Rica with an emphasis on responsible tourism – a cornerstone of the five-year-old partnership between Ponant and Smithsonian Journeys, the travel program of the Smithsonian Institution. It's the perfect antidote for cruisers looking to escape the crowds and massive ships without giving up relaxation or a beautiful tropical setting.

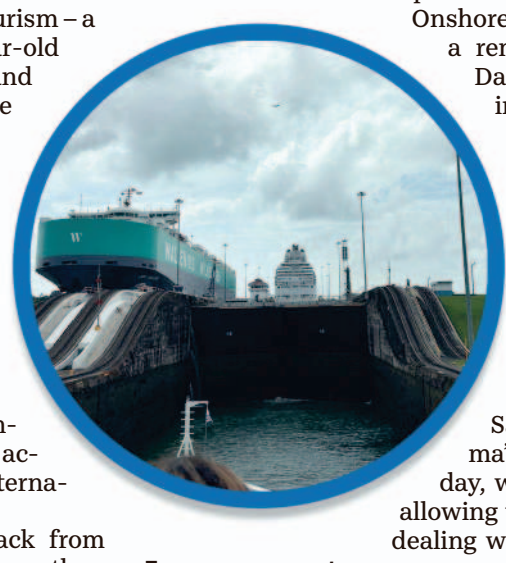

These types of expedition and exploration cruises are quickly rising in popularity, with a 71% increase in passengers between 2019 and 2023, according to the Cruise Lines International Association.

"We hope people come back from these trips having learned more than they could (have) imagined about the destination and the people in the destination," said Walter Littlejohn, Smithsonian Journeys' senior vice president. "That's our No. 1 goal."

If you're looking at warm-weather destinations, Panama and Costa Rica may fly under your radar compared to the ever-popular Caribbean. However, both Central American countries are home to incredible biodiversity, offering both wild jungles and stunning beaches. When birdwatching in Quepos, Costa Rica, with a family-run tour company, I quickly saw scarlet macaws and toucans before we even reached the site.

Both countries are also easily accessible from the U.S., with flights to Panama and Costa Rica typically ranging from three to six hours.

The six-day voyage on Le Bellot balanced education with leisure. Some nights offered a caviar tasting in the main lounge and drinks in the Blue Eye lounge, a bar situated a few meters below sea level with portholes to watch marine life pass by.

Onshore excursions include docking in a remote, undeveloped region of Darien National Park to meet the indigenous Embera people and wandering in Panama Viejo – archaeological ruins from 1519 and a World UNESCO Heritage Site.

It wasn't just about learning all the time. We also had a beach and snorkeling day, enjoying the pristine warm waters at Cayos Holandeses, an island in the San Blas archipelago – Panama's version of Hawaii. On this day, we were the only ship docked, allowing us to enjoy the island without dealing with any crowds or feeling like we were overwhelming the community.

Throughout the trip were lectures by Neighbor and Dr. Oris Sanjur – the other expert onboard, the deputy director of the Smithsonian Tropical Research Institute in Panama and a Panamanian herself – on topics such as marine conservation research and Costa Rican culture. "This expands horizons and allows people to get to know science from a different perspective, and they're engaged to become ambassadors," said Sanjur. Not only did the experts provide lectures, but guests could reserve dinner with them or have a chat with them in the lounge.

"You can go by yourself, for example, to some of these destinations, but you may not understand the backstory, the history," said Littlejohn, who added that every Smithsonian Journeys trip has at least one expert who went through an intensive vetting process. "All of these folks have a level of insight into these destinations that an average guide simply cannot deliver."

Smithsonian Journeys also infuses its Ponant cruises with its longstanding relationships with research organizations worldwide. One day, I toured STRI to learn more about its scientific work, like protecting whales from ships entering the canal, and spotted several sloths and iguanas on the property.

The Panama and Costa Rica cruise starts at $6,420 per person for a double-occupancy room, with excursions, food and most drinks included in the cost.

All Smithsonian Journeys' trips are deeply rooted in sustainability and small-group experiences, and its cruises with Ponant are no different. The ships are small – mine held up to 184 passengers – and focus on minimizing their impact, from how the ship runs to the places we visited. "Wherever we do go, we have a smaller footprint, smaller presence in the destination, so it allows the destination to retain its character in a more meaningful way, protect its environment in a more meaningful way," Littlejohn said.

Ponant's entire fleet holds the CLEANSHIP certification, which recognizes a commitment to low environmental impact through the use of cleaner diesel and strict waste traceability measures. Set to launch this year, the company's 14th ship will sail entirely off biofuel and wind and water propulsion.

Next year, the two travel entities will have 36 sailings together – with more expedition-style cruises – including sailings from Antarctica and the Greek islands along with some new destinations like Madagascar and the Seychelles and Indonesia.

HOLLYWOOD

ful, reticent, evasive, earnest and obtuse way. It kicks off with his start in the Hollywood improv group The Groundlings, where he actually created the Pee-wee Herman persona, before going mainstream with "The Pee-wee Herman Show" (1981-1984). This led to the film "Pee-wee's Big Adventure" (1985), which was directed by Tim Burton; the show "Pee-wee's Playhouse" on CBS (1986-1991); and a second film "Big Top Pee-wee" (1988).

Reubens' decline began in 1991 after his arrest in an adult gay cinema. He pondered, "How do I weather this narrative and not come off as a victim?" But his fans didn't seem to care as much as he did. After all, Pee-wee wasn't for kids; it was for the kid in all of us! I can't wait to see the documentary.

She may be able to spin letters, but Vanna White hasn't been able to commit to her 12-year boyfriend, contractor John Donaldson, and say, "I do." However, they recently came close while shooting "Wheel of Fortune" with Ryan Seacrest in Hawaii. Reportedly, her two children, 28-year-old Gigi and 30-year-old Nikko, were on standby just in case. Friends say that she considered the trip a dress rehearsal.

The Jonas Brothers – Kevin, Joe and Nick – are reuniting with Disney to star in "The Jonas Brothers Christmas Movie," a film about the obstacles the brothers face as they struggle to get home from London to New York in time to spend Christmas with their families. The trio have recorded six albums with the Disney label Hollywood Records and starred in the Disney Channel series "Jonas." I'm sure their fans would rather see them in sexy attire than a humdrum storyline!

On March 5, 1839, "Jane Eyre" author Charlotte Bronte declined a marriage proposal from the Reverend Henry Nussey, informing him that he would find her "romantic and eccentric" and not practical enough to be a clergyman's wife.

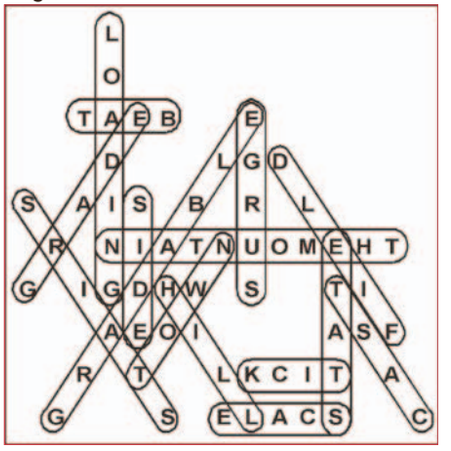

On March 6, 1475, Michelangelo Buonarroti, considered by many the greatest of the Italian Renaissance artists, was born in Caprese. The son of a government administrator, he became an artist's apprentice at age 13. He would go on to master painting, sculpture and architecture, becoming best known for masterpieces like "David" and his ceiling frescoes in the Sistine Chapel.

On March 8, 2014, Malaysia Airlines Flight 370, carrying 227 passengers and 12 crew members, lost contact with air traffic control less than an hour after taking off from Kuala Lumpur, then veered off course and disappeared. Most of the plane and all on board were never recovered.

CELEBRITY EXTRA

By Dana Jackson

Q: Is it true that "Buffy the Vampire Slayer" is coming back? Will it be a TV series or a movie? – G.A.

A: Sarah Michelle Gellar, who rose to stardom after playing the titular role in the WB series "Buffy the Vampire Slayer" from 1997-2003, has confirmed that a reboot series is in its early stages of development. The actress shunned the idea of such a project for years, especially after the show's creator Joss Whedon was canceled by Hollywood for numerous allegations of misconduct.

However, Gellar changed her mind recently when one of the original show's executive producers, Gail Berman, introduced her to Oscar-winning director Chloe Zhao ("Nomadland"). Both women convinced Gellar that their vision was one that would honor Buffy and her legacy.

According to the Los Angeles Times, the new series, which is being developed for Hulu, will center on a new, younger slayer, much like Buffy was as a teen. Gellar will also star, but it's not known yet which beloved characters from fictional Sunnydale, California, will also return.

Q: Why is there not going to be a new season of "The Bachelorette" this year? Has it been canceled? – M.E.

A: No, "The Bachelorette" hasn't been canceled, but it has been put on hiatus. It normally airs a new installment in the summer following "The Bachelor," which recently premiered on ABC for its 29th season. However, no reason has been given for why its female counterpart is being put on the shelf indefinitely.

The ratings for Jenn Tran's season last year were no worse than Charity Lawson's the year before, but Tran did have a heartbreaking ending. She proposed to her chosen suitor Devin Strader, only to have him break up with her (via phone no less) before the "After the Final Rose" live reunion. Fortunately, Tran ended up meeting her current beau, Sasha Farber, when she was paired up with him on "Dancing with the Stars."

According to Entertainment Weekly, this isn't the first time the show has taken a long break. The magazine stated: "After three consecutive January premieres, 'The Bachelorette' took two years off in 2006 and 2007 before returning with season four in 2008, which, in turn, resulted in the show moving to a summer launch date." As for who will eventually follow in Tran's footsteps, we'll just have to wait and see!

Q: Who is the new female judge on "The Voice"? I know she's a singer, but I've never heard of her before. – S.K.

A: While she looks much younger, 31-year-old Kelsea Ballerini is a new coach on the latest season of the singing competitive reality show "The Voice." Growing up in Knoxville, Tennessee, Ballerini became the first solo female country music artist to earn a No. 1 hit with her debut single ("Love Me Like You Mean It") since Carrie Underwood accomplished the same.

In the next decade, Ballerini would go on to be nominated for five Grammy Awards. Underwood, who is now 41 years old, has taken home eight Grammys since winning "American Idol" in 2005.

SALOME'S STARS

ARIES (March 21 to April 19) Try to say as little as possible about the work you're doing through the end of the month. Then you can make your announcement and accept your well-deserved plaudits.

TAURUS (April 20 to May 20) A more difficult challenge than you expected emerges early in the week. But with your strong Taurean determination, you should be able to deal with it successfully by week's end.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 20) Before you act on your "feelings" about an upcoming decision, it might be wise to do a little fact-checking first. You could be very much surprised by what you don't find.

CANCER (June 21 to July 22) A recent workplace success can open some doors that were previously closed to you. On a personal level, expect to receive some important news from a longtime friend and colleague.

LEO (July 23 to August 22) Put your wounded pride aside and do what you must to heal a misunderstanding, before it can take a potentially irreversible turn and leave you regretting the loss of a good friend.

VIRGO (August 23 to September 22) One way to kick a less-than-active social life into high gear or rebuild an outdated Rolodex file is to throw one of your well-organized get-togethers for friends and associates.

LIBRA (September 23 to October 22) Getting out of an obligation you didn't really want to take on can be tricky. An honest explanation of the circumstances can help. Next time, pay more attention to your usually keen instincts.

SCORPIO (October 23 to November 21) Use your Scorpion logic to push for a no-nonsense approach to a perplexing situation. This could help keep present and potential problems from creating more confusion.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22 to December 21) A friend's problem might take more time than you wish to give. But staying with it once again proves the depth of your Sagittarian friendship and loyalty.

CAPRICORN (December 22 to January 19) The Sea Goat can benefit from an extra dose of self-confidence to unsettle your detractors, giving you the advantage of putting on a strong presentation of your position.

AQUARIUS (January 20 to February 18) You might want to ask a friend or relative for advice on an ongoing personal matter. But be careful not to give away information that you might later wish you had kept secret.

PISCES (February 19 to March 20) Use the weekend for a creativity break to help restore your spiritual energy. Once this is done, you'll be back and more than ready to tackle whatever challenge you need to face.

BORN THIS WEEK: You get great joy out of creating beautiful things and sharing them with others who appreciate them.

Academy Awards to Be Streamed for the First Time

By Dan Rice

The pinnacle of the annual awards season finally arrives with the 97th edition of "The Oscars," held at the Dolby Theatre at Ovation Hollywood in Los Angeles and airing live on ABC while streamed on Hulu, the first Academy Awards ceremony to be broadcast as such, beginning Sunday, March 2, at 7 p.m., with the official live red carpet show airing at 6:30 p.m.

This year, Emmy Award-winning television host, writer, producer and comedian Conan O'Brien will serve his first stint as master of ceremonies for "The Oscars." "We are thrilled and honored to have the incomparable Conan O'Brien host the Oscars this year," said Academy CEO Bill Kramer and Academy President Janet Yang. "He is the perfect person to help lead our global celebration of film with his brilliant humor, his love of movies, and his live TV expertise. His remarkable ability to connect with audiences will bring viewers together to do what the Oscars do best - honor the spectacular films and filmmakers of this year."

"America demanded it, and now it's happening: Taco Bell's new Cheesy Chalupa Supreme. In other news, I'm hosting the Oscars," quipped O'Brien.

This year's Academy Awards ceremony already bears historical significance. Netflix's Spanish-language French musical crime film "Emilia Pérez" leads the field of nominees with 13 overall (followed by "The Brutalist" and "Wicked" with 10 each), the most Oscar nominations for a non-English-language film, surpassing "Roma" (2018) and "Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon" (2000) with 10 each. For her lead performance in the film, Spanish actress Karla Sofía Gascón became the first openly transgender performer to be nominated in any acting category. "Emilia Pérez" and "I'm Still Here" are also the 10th and 11th non-English language films to be nominated for both Best Picture and Best International Feature Film in the same year, and this is the first time that two films have been nominated for both categories. "I'm Still Here" also became the first Portuguese-language film to be nominated for Best Picture.

For the first time since 1978, all of the Best Actress nominees' films are nominated for Best Picture. In addition to Karla Sofia Gascón in "Emilia Pérez" these pairs of honors also apply to Fernanda Torres in "I'm Still Here," Cynthia Erivo in "Wicked," Demi Moore in "The Substance," and Mikey Madison in "Anora."

At 29 years of age, Timothée Chalamet became the youngest two-time Best Actor nominee since James Dean in 1957, having been given the nod in 2018 for "Call Me By Your Name" and now scoring for his acclaimed portrayal of Bob Dylan in "A Complete Unknown." The biographical musical drama was also nominated for Best Picture, Best Director (James Mangold), Best Adapted Screenplay (Jay Cocks & James Mangold), Best Supporting Actor (Edward Norton) and Best Supporting Actress (Monica Barbaro), as well as Best Sound and Best Costume Design.

Among the other films to note with multiple nods is the conspiracy thriller "Conclave," nominated for Best Picture, Best Adapted Screenplay (Peter Straughan), Best Actor (Ralph Fiennes), Best Supporting Actress (Isabella Rossellini), Best Production Design, Best Costume Design, Best Film Editing and Best Original Score. The sci-fi epic "Dune: Part Two" is up for Best Picture, Best Sound, Best Achievement in Cinematography, Best Achievement in Visual Effects and Best Achievement in Production Design, but no Best Actor nod for lead player Timothée Chalamet.

"The Brutalist," an epic drama about a visionary architect and his wife who flee post-war Europe in 1947 to rebuild their legacy in the modern United States, is up for 10 Academy Awards, including Best Picture, Best Directing (Brady Corbet), Best Actor (Adrien Brody), Best Supporting Actress (Felicity Jones) and Best Supporting Actor (Guy Pearce). And the gothic horror fantasy "Nosferatu," a widely acclaimed 2024 remake of F.W. Murnau's 1922 German Expressionist vampire classic, boasts a fine cast featuring Bill Skarsgård, Nicholas Hoult, Lily-Rose Depp, Aaron Taylor-Johnson and Willem Dafoe, but the film's nominations are for Cinematography, Production Design, Costume Design and Makeup & Hairstyling.

Ever ready to step up for hosting duties, Conan O'Brien will serve as master of ceremonies for the 97th edition of "The Oscars," airing live from the Dolby Theatre at Ovation Hollywood, beginning Sunday, March 2, at 7

The Best Animated Feature nominee "The Wild Robot," about an intelligent robot (voiced by Lupita Nyong'o) stranded on an uninhabited island that bonds with the local animals, is also up for Best Original Score and Best Sound. And the Best Picture nominee "Nickel Boys," a drama based on the Pulitzer Prize-winning novel by Colson Whitehead about two young men (Ethan Herisse and Brandon Wilson) navigating the harrowing trials of reform school together in Florida, is also nominated for Best Adapted Screenplay (RaMell Ross & Joslyn Barnes).

On the non-competitive side of the honors, the Jean Hersholt Humanitarian Award was bestowed upon screenwriter/director Richard Curtis ("Love Actually," "Bridget Jones's Diary," "Mr. Bean," "Blackadder"); while the Irving G. Thalberg Memorial Award goes to producers Barbara Broccoli and her half-brother Michael G. Wilson, for "their contribution to the industry's theatrical landscape" through their longtime work on the James Bond film franchise. And this year's Academy Honorary Awards have been designated for prolific casting director Juliet Taylor and the late composer/producer Quincy Jones, considered to be one of the greatest minds in music and television history.

TRIVIA TRAIN

By Dan Rice

One-Season Wonders

1. While this 1999 teen dramedy lasted only one season, it helped launch the careers of such future stars as James Franco, Seth Rogen, Busy Philipps and Jason Segel.

2. A collaboration between Mick Jagger and Martin Scorsese, this 2016 HBO period drama about the 1970s record industry lost its beat, as well as its early renewal for a second season.

3. Headlined by Dustin Hoffman, this promising 2012 HBO sports drama about equestrian racing lost its second season renewal after three horses died on set.

4. Cancelled in 1993 after five weeks on the air, this late-night talk show proved that its eponymous star's popularity as an actor and comic didn't transfer to his TV host role.

6. Co-created by Carlton Cruse ("Lost"), this 1993-94 sci-fi/steampunk Western casts "Evil Dead" star Bruce Campbell as a Harvard-educated lawyer turned bounty hunter.

7. Still a cult favorite after its single season in 1967, this avant-garde social science-fiction series about a captive intelligence agent was filled with countercultural themes.

GREENLIGHT ZONE

By Dan Rice

STARZ has announced that it has acquired the rights to "All Fours," Miranda July's propulsive, sexy and irreverent novel about a woman at a turning point in her life who embarks on a journey of self-discovery and sexual awakening. Featured prominently on many critics' best-of-year lists, the book has captivated readers around the world, sparking a cultural dialogue around female desire, aging and unconventional relationships.

"As we continue to expand our boundary-pushing programming for adults, we're excited to work with Miranda on this extraordinary story that resonates with women around the world."

A giddy, bold, mind-blowing tour de force by one of our most important literary writers (George Saunders), Miranda July's "All Fours" has been dubbed "A frank and delirious ode to love in all its forms" by Vogue and "the talk of every group text" by the New York Times. The book was an instant New York Times bestseller and has been on the Indie Bestseller List for 38 weeks and counting. A National Book Award Finalist and a New York Times Top Ten Books of the Year for 2024, "All Fours" was named a Best Book of 2024 by every major publication, including the New Yorker, Time, The Washington Post, PBS, Oprah Daily, Vogue, Vulture and many others. A global phenomenon, the book was a Sunday Times Bestseller in the UK and has sold in 25 territories to date.

HGTV will bring back the iconic series "Love It or List It" for a long-awaited new season with network fan-favorite Page Turner, best known for her competitive edge and her knack for stunning renovations, taking over the role as designer. In the eight newly ordered hourlong episodes, Page will go head-to-head with the series' longtime real estate agent David Visentin to help homeowners who are fed up with their digs. In each episode, Page will transform their lackluster property into the home of their dreams, while David searches for a new house that will better fulfill all their needs. The new season is slated for Summer 2025.

"HGTV fans first came to love Page Turner on 'Flip or Flop Nashville' and 'Fix My Flip' and were introduced to her competitive side in two seasons of 'Rock the Block,'" said Loren Ruch, Head of Content, HGTV. "Her extensive background in real estate and design will be a superpower as she enters into this celebrated real estate rivalry. We cannot wait to watch her give David a run for his money."

AMC Networks' Acorn TV and Channel 5 have announced the start of production on the new murder mystery series "Murder Before Evensong." The drama starring Matthew Lewis is based on the first novel in the Sunday Times best-selling series by British author the Reverend Richard Coles and will air later this year on Acorn TV worldwide and Channel 5 in the UK.

COUCH THEATER

By Demi Taveras

"Zero Day" (TV-MA) – It is hard to believe that the prolific Robert De Niro hadn't yet taken on a main role in a television series, but this role as ex-president George Mullen in Netflix's new political-thriller miniseries is his first! In a reality that looks scarily akin to ours, George is tasked by President Evelyn Mitchell (Angela Bassett) with heading a commission for cybercriminals after a global cyberattack leaves the world in devastation. But as George begins his investigation, he's thrust into a deeply hidden conspiracy that will test his patriotic morals. Lizzy Caplan ("Fatal Attraction"), Jesse Plemons ("Civil War") and Connie Britton ("Winner") were perfectly picked to co-star and dial in the drama. All six episodes are out now for your viewing pleasure! (Netflix)

"Mufasa: The Lion King" (PG) – This musical drama tells the story of an orphaned lion who would later become a king through the eyes of Academy-Award-winning director Barry Jenkins ("Moonlight"). Taking place after the events of "The Lion King" (2019), the film picks up after Simba, Mufasa's son, becomes King of the Pride Lands and now has a young daughter, Kiara, with his wife, Nala. While Simba's trusted friends Timon and Pumbaa watch over Kiara, the shaman Rafiki pays them a visit and decides to tell Kiara the story of her grandfather, letting viewers get whisked away to the time when Mufasa first stepped foot onto the Pride Lands. New additions to the cast include Blue Ivy Carter in her feature film debut, Mads Mikkelsen, and Thandiwe Newton. Available to rent on Feb. 18. (Amazon Prime Video)

"One of Them Days" (R) – This comedy led by Keke Palmer and SZA can be compared to the 1995 film "Friday," starring Ice Cube and Chris Tucker. The two female leads respectively play waitress Dreux (Palmer) and aspiring artist Alyssa (SZA), who face eviction after their rent fails to get paid on time. Dreux and Alyssa deduce that Alyssa's boyfriend, Keshawn, took the rent money for his own gain, so the two women are forced into a series of shenanigans to obtain $1,500 before the day is over. Lil Rel Howery, Katt Williams, and Maude Apatow co-star in this ridiculously entertaining film that is out now to rent. (Apple TV+)

DIVAS ON A DIME

One-Pot Lemon Garlic Shrimp and Rice: A Dish That's Easy, Elegant, and Surprisingly Frugal

Shrimp, once seen as a splurge, has become a frugal choice -- not because shrimp prices have dropped, but because everything else has gone up! This seafood favorite is now an economical protein compared to the skyrocketing costs of beef, chicken and even eggs. Pair that with one-pot preparation, and you've got dinner that's easy on your wallet and your schedule.

One-pot recipes streamline prep, cooking and cleanup, leaving you with more time to enjoy your meal and less time spent scrubbing dishes. This dish is fast, flavorful and destined to become a weeknight favorite.

ONE POT LEMON GARLIC SHRIMP

Yield: 4-6 servings

Total Time: 30 minutes

16 ounces uncooked shrimp (41-60 size), thawed and peeled

1 fresh lemon, see note below*

3 tablespoons butter

4 cloves garlic, minced

1/2 cup red bell pepper, diced

2 cups long-grain white rice

2 cups chicken broth

1 1/2 cup water

1 teaspoon Old Bay Seasoning

2 tablespoons chopped parsley (optional)

Prep the Ingredients: If using frozen shrimp, thaw and peel before starting.

Zest the lemon, reserving the zest. Slice lemon in half, juice half the lemon (about 2 tablespoons juice) and slice the other half for garnish.

Sauté the Garlic and Rice: Heat a deep skillet over medium heat. Add butter and garlic, and red pepper, sauteing until fragrant (1-2 minutes). Stir in the rice and continue sauteing for another 1-2 minutes until the rice begins to toast lightly. You might hear a faint crackling sound.

Cook the Rice: Cover the skillet with a lid and bring the mixture to a boil over medium-high heat. Once boiling, reduce the heat to low and let it simmer for 12 minutes.

Add the Shrimp: After 12 minutes, most of the liquid should be absorbed. Lift the lid briefly to scatter the shrimp across the top of the rice. Replace the lid and continue cooking on low for 5 minutes.

Let It Rest: Without removing the lid, remove the skillet from the heat. Let it rest for an additional 5 minutes. During this time, the shrimp will finish cooking, becoming pink and opaque.

Fluff and Serve: Gently fluff the rice with a fork, mixing in the shrimp slightly. Garnish with the reserved lemon slices, lemon zest and a sprinkle of fresh parsley, if desired. Serve hot and enjoy!

Craving spice? A dash of Cajun seasoning or smoked paprika adds a bold kick. For a fresh take, toss in fresh dill and a touch of crumbled feta. Love warm, aromatic flavors? Stir in a pinch of curry powder and a splash of coconut milk for a subtle, creamy depth.

Or go zesty with lime juice, cilantro and a hint of chili for a vibrant, Southwest-inspired version.

The combination of tender shrimp, fluffy rice and bold seasonings -- whether it's zesty lemon and garlic, smoky Cajun spice or a Mediterranean twist -- makes this dish a winner. We hope you try your favorite variations and love it as much as we do!

LONDON – British Prime Minister Keir Starmer greeted President Volodymyr Zelenskyy with a warm embrace on Saturday after the Ukrainian leader flew to London for talks following his clash at the White House with U.S. President Donald Trump.

In an extraordinary Oval Office meeting on Friday, Trump threatened to withdraw support for Ukraine, three years after Russia invaded its smaller neighbor.

French President Emmanuel Macron spoke to Zelenskyy and Trump on Saturday and called for calm in an interview following Friday's White House clash.

In London, a crowd cheered as Zelenskyy arrived for talks with Starmer at his Downing Street office before a summit of European leaders that the Ukrainian president will attend on Sunday to discuss a peace plan for Ukraine.

"I hope you heard some of that cheering in the street. That is the people of the United Kingdom coming out to demonstrate how much they support you ... and our absolute determination to stand with you," Starmer told him.

Starmer told Zelenskyy he had "full backing across the United Kingdom."

"We stand with you and Ukraine for as long as it may take," Starmer said.

Zelenskyy said on Saturday he had "important and warm" talks with Starmer, with a discussion on strengthening Ukraine's position and obtaining reliable security guarantees.

"During our talks we discussed the challenges standing before Ukraine and all of Europe, coordination with our partners, concrete steps to strengthen Ukraine's position and ending the war in a just fashion, with reliable security guarantees," Zelenskyy wrote on the Telegram messaging app.

Other European leaders also issued messages of support for Zelenskyy and Ukraine after his meeting with Trump, highlighting differences between traditional allies the United States and Europe over the war since Trump returned to office.

Senior Russian politicians have reacted with glee to what they see as Zelenskyy's White House humiliation, saying the Ukrainian leader got what he deserved and that U.S. military aid to Kyiv must now be cut.

Macron: 'Everybody needs to calm down'

The French presidency said Macron had also spoken to Starmer, European Council President Antonio Costa and NATO chief Mark Rutte, on the eve of the London summit.

"I think that beyond the frayed nerves, everybody needs to calm down, show respect and gratitude, so we can move forward concretely, because

GAZA CEASEFIRE

Israel agrees to US plan on truce

Hamas insists upon moving to 2nd phase

REUTERS

CAIRO – Israel will adopt the proposal by President Donald Trump's envoy, Steve Witkoff, for a temporary ceasefire in Gaza for the Ramadan and Passover periods, the prime minister's office said early on Sunday, hours after the first phase of the previously agreed ceasefire was set to expire.

On the first day of Witkoff's proposal, half of the hostages held in Gaza, both alive and dead, will be released, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's office said, adding the remaining hostages will also be released after a permanent ceasefire was agreed.

Witkoff made the proposal to extend the current ceasefire after realizing more time was needed for talks on a permanent ceasefire, Netanyahu's office added.

Hamas spokesperson Hazem Qassem earlier on Saturday said the group rejected Israel's "formulation" of extending the first phase of the ceasefire in Gaza, but did not explicitly mention Witkoff's plan.

Netanyahu's office said Israel would immediately conduct negotiations on Witkoff's plan if Hamas agreed to it.

"According to the agreement, Israel can return to fighting after the 42nd day if it feels that the negotiations are ineffective," Netanyahu's office also said, accusing Hamas of violating the deal.

Both sides have reported violations of the first phase of the ceasefire agreement.

Federal workers hit with second wave of emails

Now asked to report weekly on their work

Valerie Volcovici and Alexandra Alper
REUTERS

WASHINGTON – The Trump administration sent out a second round of emails on Friday evening demanding all federal employees summarize their work over the past week after the first effort a week ago fizzled amid a wave of confusing directives.

Reuters has confirmed that the emails from the government's human resources arm, the U.S. Office of Personnel Management, were sent to multiple agencies, asking workers to list five things they accomplished during the week.

The move marks a renewed push by billionaire Elon Musk and his Department of Government Efficiency team to assess the performance of government employees as the administration looks to mass layoffs to dramatically trim the federal footprint.

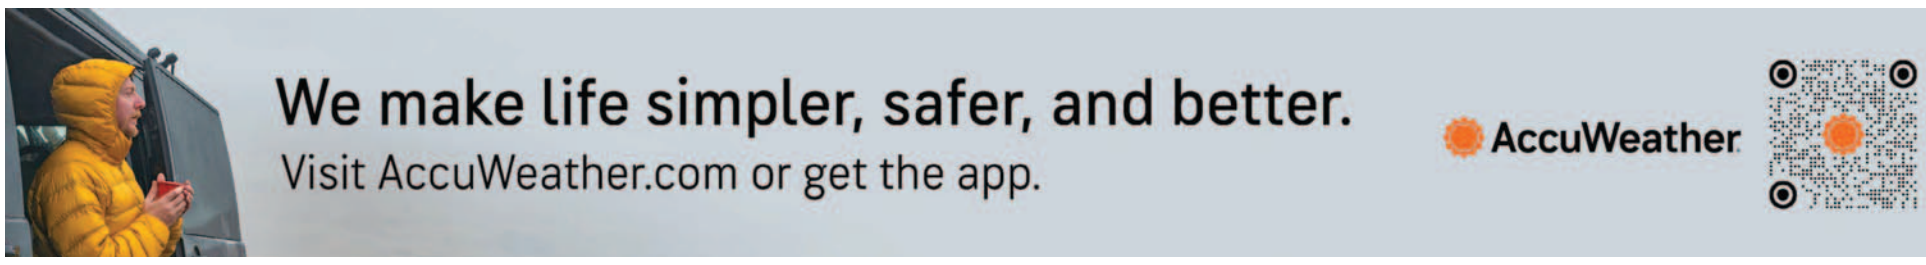

"The President has made it clear that this is mandatory for the executive branch," Musk wrote on X. "Anyone working on classified or other sensitive matters is still required to respond if they receive the email, but can simply reply that their work is sensitive."

Musk attempted a similar tack last week, along with a threat that noncompliant workers could be fired, but he was stymied when some agencies such as the State and Justice Departments told

Controversies derail Oscar front-runners

Netflix's 'Emilia Perez' hopes appear vanished

LOS ANGELES – Netflix's hopes for claiming an Academy Award for best picture appear to have vanished after a series of embarrassing social media posts resurfaced.

The genre-bending musical crime drama "Emilia Perez" looked like the streaming service's strongest shot yet at best picture after winning the jury prize at the Cannes Film Festival and garnering a total of 13 Academy Award nominations.

But prospects for the movie dimmed after a journalist found and translated a series of Spanish-language posts, dating from 2016 through 2020. In them, the film's Spanish star, Karla Sofia Gascon, described Islam as a "hotbed of infection for humanity" and George Floyd as a "drug addict swindler." Social media amplified the story to global proportions.

Gascon apologized, but the damage was done. "This is the year of somebody basically lighting themself on fire and taking their own movie down with them," said veteran marketing executive Terry Press, who has worked on Oscar campaigns on behalf of directors Steven Spielberg, Ron Howard and other Hollywood notables.

Gascon disappeared from the Hollywood awards circuit, though she has said she will attend the Oscars ceremony on Sunday.

Netflix did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

Seemingly every film nominated for best picture this year has been embroiled in some controversy, said Michael Schulman, author of "Oscar Wars: A History of Hollywood in Gold, Sweat and Tears."

Director Brady Corbet defended the use of artificial intelligence in "The Brutalist" to perfect actors Adrien Brody's and Felicity Jones' delivery of the Hungarian dialogue in the film.

Brazil's Fernanda Torres, who is nominated for best actress for her portrayal of a woman searching for her disappeared husband in "I'm Still Here," apologized for appearing in blackface in a decades-old television skit.

"I wrote a piece for the New Yorker comparing it to 'Conclave,' because the whole thing just reminds me of the movie, where every candidate running for pope has some skeleton in his closet," Schulman said.

Controversy has often dogged Oscar front-runners.

"Green Book" director Peter Farrelly apologized for being "an idiot" after The Cut reported that he had exposed himself to actress Cameron Diaz in what he called an attempt at humor. The film went on to win best picture in 2019, despite the revelation.

Sometimes, the campaigns are stoked by an opponent – as when now-disgraced producer Harvey Weinstein mounted a whispering campaign against Steven Spielberg's World War II epic "Saving Private Ryan" with its acclaimed recreation of the invasion of Normandy.

"Weinstein was telling journalists, 'Don't you think that the only really good part of the movie is the first 25 minutes, the D-Day sequence, and then the rest of it is just the standard World War II picture?' " said Schulman, who documented the campaign in his book. "This was his version of that Karl Rove credo in politics like, 'Don't attack your enemy's weakness. Attack your enemy's strength.' He managed to take this stunning battle scene and turn it into a liability."

"I would never stoop to that level," he told New York magazine in 1999.

As in politics, the personal can be difficult to separate from the on-screen performance.

The 2016 film "The Birth of a Nation," a story about a slave revolt that was written and directed by Nate Parker, became overshadowed by revelations Parker had been charged, and later acquitted, of raping a fellow student while at Penn State.

A Variety story that year detailing how Parker's accuser committed suicide in 2012 sparked a box office and awards backlash.

"It was over in a second," said one executive involved in the film, which had been seen as a best picture contender.

LONDON – Singer Charli XCX, whose album "Brat" inspired a cultural phenomenon last summer, was the big winner at the BRIT Awards, Britain's pop music honors, in London on Saturday, picking up five prizes.

"Brat," which inspired fans to film themselves dancing to its tracks and whose lime green cover look was adopted by U.S. presidential hopeful Kamala Harris' campaign on social media after the singer referenced her in a post, won the coveted album of the year category.

Charli XCX, who had led nominations, was also named artist of the year and best dance act. Her single "Guess," featuring Billie Eilish, won song of the year, beating tracks including the Beatles' "Now and Then."

The 32-year-old pop star had won her first BRIT, songwriter of the year, last week.

"I've always felt like an outsider in the industry but particularly in the British music industry and so it feels really nice to be recognized on this album," she said as she received the album of the year award.

"I would just like to share this with all artists who have ever felt that they need to compromise to be recognized and to have their moment in the sun because I think I'm living proof that maybe it takes a long time, but... you don't need to compromise your vision."

The singer released her debut studio album in 2013. "Brat" was her sixth and she said she would "probably never make a record like this again."

"It's so in my instinct to just like not do the same thing twice... I will probably reject it completely and do something completely different," she said.

Jazz quintet Ezra Collective was named group of the year.

"This moment right here is because of the great youth clubs and great teachers and the great schools that support young people playing music," drummer Femi Koleoso said in one of several of the night's acceptance speeches that called for more support for young musicians and grassroots venues.

U.S. singer Chappell Roan won international artist of the year while her track "Good Luck, Babe!" won international song of the year.

"Espresso" singer Sabrina Carpenter was named as the first international recipient of the global success award, which recognizes artists with "phenomenal global sales," following in the footsteps of One Direction, Adele, Ed Sheeran and Sam Smith.

The ceremony also featured a tribute dedicated to late One Direction singer Liam Payne, who died in October after falling from a hotel room balcony in Buenos Aires, shocking fans of the boy band, one of the most popular of all time.

NOTABLE DEATHS

Lawrence J. "Larry" Dolan, 94, owner of the Cleveland Guardians, died the night of Feb. 23, the club said Monday. A cause of death was not given. Paul Dolan had taken over for his father as the organization's primary control person in 2013. Larry Dolan purchased the club on Feb. 15, 2000, making the Dolan family the longest-serving owners in franchise history.

Roberta Flack, 88, the silky-voiced, Grammy-winning singer whose sultry ballads "The First Time Ever I Saw Your Face" and "Killing Me Softly With His Song" topped the charts in the 1970s, died on Monday, her publicist said. No cause of death was given. The classically trained pianist defied musical genres as she blended aspects of jazz, soul, pop and R&B to create a distinctive style and became one of America's most influential singers. Flack revealed in November 2022 that she had been diagnosed with ALS, also known as Lou Gehrig's disease, and could no longer sing.

Rose Girone, 113, the woman believed to be the oldest known Holocaust survivor, has died, her family and a Jewish organization that secures compensation for Holocaust survivors said on Thursday. When her husband was arrested and sent to the Buchenwald Nazi concentration camp, Girone was eight months pregnant, the nonprofit Claims Conference said in a social media post announcing her death. The organization said she died on Monday. After her husband's release, the family fled Breslau, Germany, to Shanghai, the New York-based Claims Conference added.

Gene Hackman, 95, a two-time Oscar winner, has died, alongside his wife, pianist Betsy Arakawa, 64, and one of their dogs, at home, the Santa Fe County Sheriff's Office in New Mexico said on Thursday. A statement from a sheriff's office spokesperson to USA TODAY said deputies had found the couple deceased in separate rooms on Wednesday afternoon. Foul play was not suspected; an investigation was continuing. Hackman earned a best supporting actor Oscar nomination for his role as Clyde Barrow's brother in 1967's "Bonnie and Clyde." He received a second best supporting actor nomination for his role in 1970s "I Never Sang for My Father" before winning best actor for his performance as New York City detective Jimmy "Popeye" Doyle in director William Friedkin's landmark police drama "The French Connection."

Clint Hill, 93, the U.S. Secret Service agent who leaped atop John F. Kennedy's limousine to shield the mortally wounded president and long wondered if he could have saved him by acting more quickly, has died, his family said on Monday. Hill, seen in film footage of the Nov. 22, 1963, assassination scrambling across the back of the limousine to reach the president and his wife, Jacqueline, died peacefully at home, the family said in a statement.

Boris Spassky, 88, a Russian chess grandmaster, has died, International Chess Federation general director Emil Sutovsky told Reuters on Thursday. Spassky, who took French nationality in 1978, was the 10th World Chess Champion, holding the title from 1969 to 1972, when he lost it to American Bobby Fischer in Reykjavik, Iceland, in a contest later dubbed the "Match of the Century."

Michelle Trachtenberg, 39, a 2000s mainstay with memorable roles in "Gossip Girl," "Harriet the Spy" and "Buffy the Vampire Slayer," has died. New York City police officers on Wednesday found the actress unconscious and unresponsive in a New York City apartment building, an NYPD spokesperson confirmed to USA TODAY. EMS officials responded to the scene and found the actress dead. The New York City native started her career at 3 in television commercials. Some of Trachtenberg's recent Instagram photos sparked comments claiming that she appeared unwell.

Cuomo announces run for NYC mayor

REUTERS

NEW YORK – Andrew Cuomo announced on Saturday he is running to become mayor of New York City, more than three years after he resigned in disgrace as governor of New York after being accused of sexually harassing a number of women who worked for him and misleading the public about COVID-19 deaths.

Cuomo, 67, denies the allegations. He is among the most well-known of a number of candidates challenging embattled Mayor Eric Adams to become the Democratic Party's nominee in the primary election in June.

"I know what needs to be done and I know how to do it," Cuomo said in a video message, saying the city needs a bold plan to address crime, mental illness and other concerns, and calling for a permanent increase in police numbers and the construction of thousands of affordable homes.

Adams is seeking a second term even as he faces calls to resign by senior Democrats after he was indicted last year on corruption charges and then courted President Donald Trump, a Republican, as he seeks to have the indictment dismissed. Adams, 64, has pleaded not guilty.

Cuomo entered politics in the 1980s helping his father, Mario Cuomo, win three terms as New York governor, an office he himself won in 2010. He also served in President Bill Clinton's Cabinet as U.S. housing secretary, and, before becoming governor, served a term as New York's attorney general.

As governor, Cuomo signed bills legalizing same-sex marriage and recreational marijuana, and in New York City he oversaw an expansion of Pennsylvania Station and an overhaul of LaGuardia Airport.

He was known for making daily public briefings in the early days of the COVID pandemic, which killed thousands of New Yorkers, but his response to the crisis became the beginning of his political downfall.

In an audit, New York state's comptroller found Cuomo's administration had pressured the health department to deliberately undercount COVID deaths of state nursing home residents. Cuomo had signed a $5.1 million deal for a book about his leadership during the pandemic, but the state ethics board revoked its approval after saying Cuomo wrongly used state employees and resources to write it.

Cuomo has said he did nothing wrong or unethical, and has sued the ethics board, which has sought the $5.1 million from him, in litigation that continues.

Former New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo is now among the most well-known of a number of candidates running for New York City mayor. ANNABELLE GORDON/REUTERS FILE

In August 2021, Cuomo resigned a week after New York Attorney General Letitia James released the results of an investigation which concluded that Cuomo had sexually harassed 11 women. He said he had done nothing wrong, but apologized to anyone he made uncomfortable by what he described as clumsy attempts to be affectionate or funny.

Ted Hesson
REUTERS

WASHINGTON – A U.S. civil rights group on Saturday sued to block the Trump administration from potentially transferring 10 migrants from the U.S. to a naval base in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, detailing harsh conditions and suicide attempts among migrants held there.

The American Civil Liberties Union, which filed the lawsuit in federal court in Washington, D.C., said the transfers violate U.S. immigration law by moving the detainees outside of the country and aim to stoke fear without a legitimate rationale.

The 10 detainees in the lawsuit are men from Venezuela, Bangladesh, Pakistan and Afghanistan with final deportation orders, including some who have been threatened with transfer to Guantanamo, the ACLU said. The men, currently held in Texas, Arizona and Virginia, are not gang members or high-risk criminals, the group said.

U.S. Department of Homeland Security spokesperson Tricia McLaughlin on Saturday called the ACLU legal challenge "baseless" and said the agency would work with the Justice Department to fight the lawsuit.

President Donald Trump has vowed to deport record numbers of immigrants who are in the U.S. illegally. As part of efforts to expand deportations, the administration in early February began sending migrants to a detention camp on the U.S. naval base in Guantanamo Bay, best known for holding foreign terrorism suspects.

Cuban and Haitian migrants intercepted at sea have been held at a migrant facility on the base in previous decades. However, the Trump administration effort was the first to transfer migrants there from the U.S., according to the ACLU.

U.S. Department of Homeland Security Secretary Kristi Noem has said they are sending "the worst of the worst" to Guantanamo, but about a third of the initial group of 177 Venezuelans had no criminal record, according to the department.

The ACLU lawsuit alleges that migrants detained at Guantanamo have been held in windowless rooms for at least 23 hours per day, subjected to invasive strip searches, and unable to contact family members. The suit said that guards "engage in verbal and physical abuse," including strapping detainees to a chair, withholding water, threatening to shoot detainees, and fracturing one person's hand.

"These degrading conditions and extreme isolation have led to several suicide attempts," the complaint said.

A federal judge blocked the possible transfer of several Venezuelan migrants to Guantanamo in mid-February but the men – also represented by ACLU – were then deported to Venezuela.

On Saturday, the New York Times reported a group of lawyers separately sued the Panamanian government in the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights, naming 10 Iranians and 102 migrants detained at a camp in Panama as plaintiffs.

In another lawsuit filed on Friday, immigrant rights organizations and others sued to block Trump's moves to end former President Joe Biden's "parole" programs that allowed hundreds of thousands of people with U.S. sponsors or fleeing danger to enter legally.

The lawsuit, filed in a Massachusetts federal court, argues the administration failed to follow proper regulatory steps when it abruptly ended programs for Cubans, Haitians, Nicaraguans, Venezuelans and Ukrainians with U.S. sponsors, as well as a program for Afghans who fled the Taliban takeover.

Trump orders new tariff probe on lumber imports

David Lawder and Andrea Shalal
REUTERS

WASHINGTON – President Donald Trump on Saturday ordered a new trade investigation that could heap more tariffs on imported lumber, adding to existing duties on Canadian softwood lumber and 25% tariffs on all Canadian and Mexican goods due this week.

In his third new tariff probe in a week, Trump signed a memo ordering Commerce Secretary Howard Lutnick to initiate a national security investigation into U.S. lumber imports under Section 232 of the Trade Expansion Act of 1962. The trade law is the one Trump also used to impose tariffs on global steel and aluminum imports.

The probe covers derivative products made from lumber which could include furniture such as kitchen cabinets, which in some cases are made of U.S. lumber that had been exported, a White House official said. The official said the investigation would be expedited by the Commerce Department, but gave no specific timeline.

Trump also ordered new steps to increase the domestic supply of lumber by streamlining the permitting process for harvesting lumber from public lands and improving the salvage of fallen trees from forests and waterways, the official said.

A White House fact sheet said the order calls for new or updated agency guidance to facilitate increased timber production, including quicker approvals for forestry projects under the Endangered Species Act.

White House trade adviser Peter Navarro said the lumber import probe would counteract the actions of big lumber exporters including Canada, Germany and Brazil, which he said were "dumping lumber into our markets at the expense of both our economic prosperity and national security."

"That stops today with a pair of Trumpian actions designed to both bolster supply of and demand for American timber and lumber," he told reporters on a conference call ahead of the signing.

The White House official said that increasing reliance on imported lumber represents a possible national security risk partly because the U.S. military consumes significant quantities of lumber for its construction activities and because increasing dependence on imports for a commodity with ample domestic supplies is a danger to the U.S. economy. The official did not provide details on a proposed tariff rate under the Section 232 lumber probe, but Trump last month told reporters that he was thinking about imposing a 25% tariff rate on lumber and forest products.

The official said any tariffs resulting from the probe would be added to the existing 14.5% combined anti-dumping and anti-subsidy duties on Canadian softwood lumber.

Ultimately, OPM informed agencies that responding to the emails was voluntary.

But Musk, with President Donald Trump's backing, continued to press for the emails as a means they said to hold workers accountable. Both men suggested that some federal employees on the payroll do not exist.

Critics, including Democratic lawmakers and labor unions, say widespread cuts could hamper crucial government functions and services.

The second round of emails does not include any threat of retaliation for noncompliance but say workers are expected to send responses at the beginning of each work week.

Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth has directed Pentagon workers to comply, according to media reports, but the State Department again told their employees to hold off, according to a directive seen by Reuters.

The Department of Homeland Security told its employees to respond to an internal DHS email address, labeled "accountability" because of its national security responsibilities, according to a memo reviewed by Reuters.

The Justice Department also received the directive. The acting U.S. attorney for the District of Columbia, Ed Martin, told workers in his office to comply, according to a message seen by Reuters.

"All federal government departments are cooperating with @DOGE," Musk posted on Saturday. "For State, DoD and a few others, the supervisors are gathering the weekly accomplishments on behalf of individual contributors."

Reuters was able to confirm the emails were also sent to employees at the Internal Revenue Service, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, and the National Institutes for Health. Those agencies have all been targeted by DOGE for layoffs.

Musk's team last month instructed agencies across the government to submit plans by March 13 for a "significant reduction" in staffing across the federal workforce.

Layoffs continue

Already, about 100,000 workers have taken buyouts or been fired after DOGE was dispatched by Trump to gut federal staffing and spending. There are about 2.3 million federal employees in all.

The layoffs have occurred in such haphazard fashion that some agencies such as the Food and Drug Administration have been forced to recall key personnel in order to ensure public safety.

On Friday, the Social Security Administration, which sends out benefit checks to tens of millions of Americans, said it would cut 7,000 people from its workforce and shutter several regional offices.

Most recently, the Trump administration has pulled the plug on a team of tech-savvy civil servants that helped build the Internal Revenue Service's free tax filing service and revamped websites across government.

In an email sent overnight to employees of the U.S. General Services Administration and seen by Reuters, the GSA's director of technology transformation services, Thomas Shedd, said the team – known as 18F – had been identified as "non-critical."

Formed at the tail end of President Barack Obama's administration, the unit acted as an internal tech consultancy within government, ferreting out duplication and waste, streamlining bureaucratic processes, and making public-facing websites more user-friendly.

Questions about Musk's role and DOGE are at the heart of multiple lawsuits seeking to block them from accessing government systems and confidential data. The suits allege that Musk and DOGE are violating the Constitution by wielding the kind of vast power that only comes from agencies created through Congress or appointments made with confirmation by the U.S. Senate.

Musk's actions have also caused some tension and confusion among Trump's White House aides, although Trump himself is said to be wholly on board with the effort.

RUSSIA-UKRAINE WAR

Ukrainians facing new reality

Trump-Zelenskyy spat rattles war-torn country

KYIV, Ukraine – Ukrainians faced a daunting new reality on Saturday following the White House clash between President Volodymyr Zelenskyy and U.S. President Donald Trump which plunged ties between Kyiv and its top military backer to a new low.

Friday's confrontation flared over differing visions of how to end Russia's three-year-long invasion, with Zelenskyy seeking strong security guarantees from a Trump administration that has embraced diplomacy with Vladimir Putin's Russia.

Ukrainians, many of them hardened by three years of war, rallied behind Zelenskyy in defiance but worried about the future of U.S. backing for Kyiv's war effort.

"The Americans don't know the real situation, what's going on here," said Ella Kazantseva, 54, across from a sea of flags in central Kyiv commemorating Ukraine's war dead.

"They don't understand. Everything is beautiful for them."

Kazantseva is from eastern Ukraine, where fighting has been fierce. She was speaking shortly after the air force said it had destroyed more than 100 Russian-launched drones across Ukraine in the latest Russian attack.

In the northeastern city of Kharkiv, where a hospital was damaged overnight and seven people wounded, a local resident who identified himself as Ivan compared Trump's behavior to the main character in the 1972 gangster film "The Godfather."

"Kiss the ring. If you don't, get out," he said, bundled up in a beige jacket.

Minerals deal not signed

Following the spat in Washington, an agreement between Ukraine and the U.S. to jointly develop Ukraine's natural resources – seen as important to peace efforts – was left unsigned and in limbo.

Zelenskyy, before being welcomed by British Prime Minister Keir Starmer in London on Saturday, struck a conciliatory tone on social media, thanking the U.S. for its support and saying he still hoped to sign the deal.

"Despite the tough dialogue, we remain strategic partners," he wrote on X. "But we need to be honest and direct with each other to truly understand our shared goals."

The spokeswoman for Russia's Foreign Ministry said Zelenskyy's U.S. trip had been a diplomatic failure and showed the Ukrainian leader wanted the war to continue.

Kyiv resident Liudmyla Stetsevych, 47, said she feared her country was being squeezed by larger powers.

"Trump and Putin are dividing up the world – that's what I would say. I don't know what will come of it," she said.

Stetsevych and others interviewed by Reuters expressed hope that Ukraine's allies in Europe would boost political and military support if the U.S. dialed back its own.

"A new era of wickedness has begun," said German Foreign Minister Annalena Baerbock on Saturday, calling for Germany to release an additional $3.1 billion in aid for Ukraine.

Ukrainian lawmaker Andrii Osadchuk said the tone from Trump and Vice President JD Vance was in line with prior rhetoric, and that Kyiv's other Western partners needed to do more.

"Not just a lot, but probably everything will depend on Europe – both for itself and for Ukraine," Osadchuk said.

Former President Petro Poroshenko, Zelenskyy's main domestic political rival, said it was not the time to criticize Zelenskyy but that he hoped the president had a "Plan B."

Summit of leaders

A wider summit of European leaders will be held in London on Sunday to discuss a security backstop to any peace agreement between Moscow and Kyiv.

EU leaders are also expected to meet later this week to discuss an increase in defense spending. On Saturday, NATO chief Mark Rutte told Zelenskyy that he needed to find a way to restore his relationship with Trump.

Ukrainian news outlet European Pravda said Zelenskyy's spat with U.S. leaders, while potentially damaging, sent a powerful signal of how seriously Ukraine takes its sovereignty.

Political analyst Yevhen Hlibovytsky, director of the Frontier Institute in Kyiv, pointed to prior "false predictions" from outside observers about Ukraine's ability to carry on with limited Western support.

"Does that mean that Ukraine will overperform in the future? Not necessarily," he said. "But, as a rule of thumb, I would say that Ukraine is usually more resilient than it looks from the outside."

WASHINGTON – The meeting between U.S. President Donald Trump and Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy was becoming contentious on Friday when Vice President JD Vance, sitting on a couch across from Trump in the Oval Office, weighed in with a zinger.

"With respect, I think it's disrespectful for you to come into the Oval Office and try to litigate this in front of the American media," Vance told Zelenskyy, who had just challenged Trump's No. 2 to explain what he meant by advocating for diplomacy with Russia.

"You should be thanking the president for trying to bring an end to this conflict," Vance snapped.

Though the extraordinary White House meeting put tensions between Zelenskyy and Trump on public display, it also showcased Vance's increasing role as an attack dog of sorts for his boss. Democrats accused the White House of setting up Zelenskyy with the Oval Office onslaught, but a source familiar with the meeting said Vance's encounter with the Ukrainian leader was "not planned."

Vance, 40, a potential heir to Trump's Make America Great Again political movement, has served as a loyal lieutenant to the president since they came into office a little over a month ago.

The former senator from Ohio has also carved out a spot as a sharp-tongued defender of the commander-in-chief, elevating him among other Trump lieutenants, including billionaire Elon Musk, who is leading the president's charge to cut what they see as government waste.

"This was the flexing of JD Vance. Vance is different than Elon. For him to sit and take on Zelenskyy in front of Trump was a very big moment," said one U.S. official, speaking on condition of anonymity. "He moved to support the president, and Trump loves it when people step out to do the confrontation that he usually does."

A senior White House official said the meeting took a turn specifically when Zelenskyy confronted the vice president.

Zelenskyy, who argued that Russian President Vladimir Putin had not respected a 2019 ceasefire deal, asked Vance, using his first name, to explain his push for diplomacy.

"What kind of diplomacy, JD, you are speaking about?" Zelenskyy, who was speaking in English, said to Vance.

"I'm talking about the kind of diplomacy that's going to end the destruction of your country," Vance retorted, referring to Zelenskyy as "Mr. President."

Vance jumped in again after Trump, riled up, also accused Zelenskyy of being disrespectful and gambling with a potential World War III.

"Have you said 'thank you' once?" said Vance, a Republican, accusing Zelenskyy of having campaigned on behalf of the Democratic opposition during the 2024 presidential election.

Zelenskyy made an unannounced stop in former President Joe Biden's childhood hometown of Scranton, Pennsylvania, in September to visit a munitions plant. Trump defeated Democratic presidential nominee Kamala Harris, Biden's vice president, in the 2024 White House race.

Zelenskyy noted that Vance was speaking loudly. That did not go over well with Trump.

"He's not speaking loudly," Trump said. "You've done a lot of talking. Your country is in big trouble."

Vance showed a similar appetite for confrontation during a trip in February to Munich, where he accused European leaders of censoring free speech and failing to control immigration.

He also played the role on the campaign trail last year after he became Trump's running mate.

"JD Vance is very good at articulating the president's agenda and going on the attack, which is why Donald Trump chose him," said Republican strategist Lance Trover.

Vance's role in the meeting on Friday drew praise from Trump's allies. "I was very proud of JD Vance, standing up for our country," Republican Sen. Lindsey Graham, a staunch ally of Ukraine, said at the White House after the meeting.

Vance reached over and patted Trump on the arm as journalists were ushered out of the Oval Office. He did not, at least in front of the cameras, shake hands with the Ukrainian leader.

what's at stake is too important," Macron said in an interview with several Sunday newspapers.

Macron said Zelenskyy had told him he was willing to "restore dialogue" with the United States, including on a deal giving U.S. access to revenues from Ukraine's natural resources, but did not say what Trump told him in the call.

The White House had no immediate comment. In an interview with CNN on Friday, Trump's Secretary of State Marco Rubio called on Zelenskyy to "apologize for turning this thing into the fiasco for him that it became."

Zelenskyy, in an interview with Fox News on Friday, said he believed his relationship with Trump could be salvaged and appeared to express some regret, saying "I'm sorry for this."

The falling-out meant that Ukraine and the United States failed to sign a much-vaunted minerals deal Kyiv hoped would spur Trump to back Ukraine's war effort and potentially win support from Republicans in Congress for a new round of aid.

Trump is not interested in revisiting the minerals deal at the moment, a senior White House official told Reuters on Friday evening. Starmer spoke to both Trump and Zelenskyy on Friday, and Macron also visited Trump in Washington last week.

Zelenskyy is also due to meet King Charles III on Sunday. Britain's Sun newspaper said the meeting would take place at the monarch's Sandringham estate in eastern England.

"I'm very happy that His Majesty the King accepted my meeting tomorrow," Zelenskyy told Starmer.

Britain has been a vocal backer of Ukraine and Charles has previously expressed his support for Zelenskyy, speaking of the "determination and strength" of the Ukrainian people in the face of an unprovoked attack from Russia. During Starmer's visit to the White House, he presented Trump with a written invitation from the king for a state visit, which would make the U.S. president the first elected political leader in modern times to be hosted for two state visits by a British monarch.

NTSB, FAA to probe FedEx plane engine fire, emergency landing

A FedEx Boeing 767 cargo plane struck a bird while departing Newark Liberty International Airport in New Jersey on Saturday and made an emergency landing with one engine on fire.

FedEx Flight 3609, which was headed to Indianapolis, landed safely nine minutes after takeoff at 7:58 a.m. The Federal Aviation Administration and National Transportation Safety Board will investigate.

Transportation Secretary Sean Duffy said the strike caused one of the plane's engines to burst into flames, forcing the plane to quickly land.

"Video from the incident shows the quick-thinking pilots returning the plane to land safely while the engine is on fire," Duffy said.

FedEx did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

Duffy cited a U.S. Department of Transportation report that said there were over 19,000 bird strikes in 2023, up 14% over 2022. The report found 65% of bird strikes occur during takeoff or landing and around 5% of strikes result in damage to an aircraft.

At least 37 dead and dozens more injured in bus crash in Bolivia

LA PAZ, Bolivia – A crash involving two buses in Bolivia left at least 37 people dead and dozens injured in the western Potosi region, police and local authorities said on Saturday.

The accident happened during the early morning hours on the route between the cities of Uyuni and Colchani, when one of the vehicles swerved into the oncoming lane.

"As a result of this fatal accident we have 39 people injured in four hospitals in the town of Uyuni, and 37 people have lost their lives," a spokesman for the Departmental Police Command of Potosi told reporters.

At the scene, a crane turned over one of the buses, which had rolled over onto its side, and police officers were seen removing bodies from the crashed vehicles and carrying them away wrapped in blankets.

According to the preliminary investigation, one of the buses encroached into the oncoming lane, presumably due to speeding, and caused the collision, the Bolivian Ministry of Government said in a statement.

Serbian protesters keep up pressure over railway disaster

NIS, Serbia – Tens of thousands of people flocked to the southern town of Nis on Saturday to commemorate victims of a railway station disaster and take part in a student-led protest movement that has become the biggest threat yet to the Serbian president's grip on power.

Mass demonstrations have gathered momentum in the four months since 15 people were killed when a roof collapsed at a newly renovated train station in Novi Sad, Serbia's second-biggest city.

Many Serbians blame the collapse on corruption they link to President Aleksandar Vucic's decade in power, and teachers, farmers and other workers have joined the protests that began with a student blockade of classes at universities in December. Vucic's government has said it will launch an anti-corruption campaign, and has denied allegations of corruption.

At 11:52 a.m., the time when the roof collapsed on November 1, thousands stood in silence in the central streets of Nis to commemorate the victims.

Prime Minister Milos Vucevic and two other ministers have resigned over the protests, which have taken place across the country.

Vietnam pledges quick licensing for Musk's Starlink, more imports

HANOI, Vietnam – Vietnam's Prime Minister Pham Minh Chinh said on Saturday the government wanted to rapidly issue a license for Elon Musk's Starlink to provide satellite internet in the country under a pilot scheme.

Chinh, speaking with nearly 40 U.S. businesses in Hanoi, also said that Vietnam was taking measures to rebalance its trade surplus with the U.S., citing potential imports of aircraft, arms, liquefied natural gas, agriculture goods and pharmaceutical products.

Hanoi is trying to avoid U.S. duties on its ballooning exports, which contributed to a record trade surplus last year, making the Southeast Asian nation vulnerable to reciprocal tariffs threatened by President Donald Trump.

"The PM has directed the Ministry of Science and Technology to quickly issue a license to Starlink internet (services) on a trial basis," the government said on its website, reporting on the discussions Chinh had with U.S. businesses.

PKK militants declare ceasefire

Group heeds call from jailed Kurdish leader

REUTERS

The outlawed Kurdistan Workers Party militant group declared an immediate ceasefire on Saturday, a news agency close to it said, heeding jailed leader Abdullah Ocalan's disarmament call, in a major step toward ending a 40-year insurgency.

Ocalan on Thursday called on the Kurdistan Workers Party, known as the PKK, to lay down its arms and dissolve, a move that Turkish President Tayyip Erdogan's government and the opposition pro-Kurdish DEM Party voiced support for.

The ceasefire could have wide-ranging implications for the region if it succeeds in ending a conflict that has killed more than 40,000 people since the PKK – now based in the mountains of northern Iraq – launched its armed insurgency in 1984.

It could also give Erdogan a domestic boost and an historic opportunity to bring peace and development to southeast Turkey, where the conflict has severely damaged the economy.

The group said it hoped Ankara would give Ocalan, held in near total isolation since 1999, more freedoms so he can lead a disarmament process, adding that the necessary political and democratic conditions must be established for it to succeed.

"We, as the PKK, fully agree with the content of the call and state that, from our front, we will heed the necessities of the call and implement it," the group said in a statement, according to the Firat news agency.

"Beyond this, issues like laying down arms being put into practice can only be realized under the practical leadership of Leader Apo," the group said, using its nickname for Ocalan, adding it would halt all hostilities immediately unless attacked.

The PKK, designated a terrorist group by Turkey and its Western allies, said it was ready to convene a congress, as Ocalan urged, but the necessary security conditions should be established for him to "personally direct and run" it.

Speaking at a fast-breaking event in Istanbul on the first day of the Muslim holy month of Ramadan on Saturday, Erdogan said Turkey will resume operations against the PKK if the disarmament process is stalled, and assured families that the process would not hinder counter-terrorism. "If the promises that are made are constantly stalled, if an attempt to turn to trickery by eyewashing, changing names, and doing as you please, we can't be blamed for what happens," he said.

"If needed, we will keep up our operations – which are still continuing – leaving no stone standing and leaving no heads on shoulders, until every last terrorist is eliminated," he added.

Earlier, Vice President Cevdet Yilmaz said on X that the dissolution of the PKK "without any negotiation" would usher in a new era.

Previous efforts to end the insurgency, held in the years 2009-2011 and 2013-2015, failed and resulted in increased violence.

PKK demands on Ocalan

The DEM Party urged the government on Friday to take steps toward democratization, telling Reuters that its response was critical.

For the process to advance, the PKK said Ocalan must be given "physical freedom, achieve living and working conditions, form relationships with anyone he wants, including friends, without obstacles."

Whether Ankara will address these issues is unclear. Justice Minister Yilmaz Tunc told broadcaster CNN Turk on Friday that no amnesty, house arrest or other options were being discussed, and that there were no negotiations.

Analysts have said Erdogan, who has made repeated efforts in the past to end the conflict, is focused on the domestic political dividends that peace could bring as he looks to extend his two-decade rule beyond 2028 when his term expires.

Ending the insurgency would remove a constant flash point in Kurdish-run, oil-rich northern Iraq, while facilitating efforts by Syria's new administration to assert greater sway over areas in northern Syria controlled by Kurdish forces.

Ocalan's call, prompted by a surprise proposal in October by Devlet Bahceli, an ultranationalist ally of Erdogan, has been welcomed by the United States, the European Union and other Western allies, as well as by Turkey's neighbors Iraq and Iran.

On Saturday, Bahceli said he welcomed the PKK's statement to heed Ocalan's call.

"In such a critical environment and circumstances, a historic window of opportunity has been opened for Turkey," he said in a statement, adding nobody should be allowed to derail the process.

Pope Francis remains stable, Vatican says

VATICAN CITY – Pope Francis, who has been in the hospital for just over two weeks fighting double pneumonia, is in a stable condition and has not had further breathing crises, the Vatican said on Saturday.

The 88-year-old pontiff suffered a constriction of his respiratory airways on Friday, akin to an asthma attack, renewing concerns over the pope's well-being.

However, in a more upbeat readout on Saturday, the Vatican said the pope did not have a fever and did not show signs of an increased white blood cell count, adding that his blood flow and circulation remained stable.

An elevated white blood cell count often indicates the presence of an active infection or inflammation.

"The Holy Father's clinical condition remained stable," the Vatican said, adding that the prognosis was still guarded, meaning he was not yet out of danger.

The Vatican said that for a second day running the pope required non-invasive, mechanical ventilation, alternating between this and "long periods of high-flow oxygen therapy."

The pope was continuing to eat and was always vigilant, the statement said.

Francis was admitted to Rome's Gemelli hospital on February 14 with severe respiratory problems that swiftly deteriorated into double pneumonia – a serious infection in both lungs that can inflame and scar them, making it difficult to breathe.

He last suffered what the Vatican described as a "prolonged asthma-like respiratory crisis" on February 22, but there had not been any repeat crises until Friday.

Francis has experienced several bouts of ill health over the last two years and is prone to lung infections because he had pleurisy as a young adult and had part of one lung removed.

The pope has not been seen in public since entering the hospital, his longest absence from view since his papacy started in March 2013, and his doctors have not said how long his treatment might last.

As expected, the Vatican said that for a third week running, the pope would not lead his usual Sunday prayers with pilgrims and that once again the text of the Angelus prayer would be published rather than read out.

with the negotiation told Reuters that Israel refused to enter the second phase of the agreement or start negotiations about it.

Instead, Israel requested an extension of the first phase, conditioned on the handover of a number of living prisoners and bodies for each week of extension.

Hamas, however, rejected and insisted on adhering to the deal, entering the second phase, and obliging Israel to what was agreed upon.

On Saturday, Hamas's armed wing posted a video showing Israeli hostages still in its custody in Gaza and stressed that the remaining hostages can only be freed through a swap deal as stated in the phased ceasefire agreement that began on January 19.

The ceasefire agreement halted 15 months of fighting, allowing the exchange of 33 Israeli hostages and five Thais for around 2,000 Palestinian prisoners and detainees. It was meant to lead to subsequent talks to build on the ceasefire deal.

Talks about the ceasefire have been ongoing, most recently in Cairo, but have not led to an agreement.
