Hull withdraws from Evian Championship

Field Level Media

Charley Hull withdrew from the Evian Championship in France on Thursday after collapsing on the hole No. 4 tee due to illness.

Hull, ranked No. 19 in the world, was playing with partners world No. 4 Ruoning Yin and Haeran Ryu. She received medical attention after going down to the grass before her tee shot and officials permitted the trailing group to play through while tending to the Englishwoman.

Following a delay of just under 15 minutes to receive treatment, the two-time LPGA winner recovered to hit the tee shot but again went to the ground after completing her swing.

She was helped onto a motorized cart fitted with a flatbed stretcher. Hull reportedly has been battling a virus.

Hull, 29, was at even par. She has not yet won a major and finished T-12 in the Women's PGA Championship and U.S. Women's Open in 2025.

NASCAR Cup Series driver Daniel Suarez, seen here on May 4, will be looking for work after the season after Trackhouse Racing announced Suarez won't be back in 2026.

Trackhouse Racing's Marks: 'Was time to move on' from Suarez

Field Level Media

Earlier this month, Trackhouse Racing announced that Daniel Suarez and the organization would be parting ways in 2026. Following the Chicago Street Race on Sunday, Trackhouse owner Justin Marks addressed the divorce with reporters.

"When we ... mapped out our three-year and our five-year plan and the sponsorships and everything that we're trying to accomplish over the next five years of the company, we just got to a point where we felt like that relationship had borne a lot of fruit for us, but it was time to move on," Marks said.

Suarez, the only Mexican-born driver to win a NASCAR event, has been with Trackhouse since its NASCAR debut five years ago, initially starting off as the team's only driver.

But he's the only driver on a current team of three yet to win a race in 2025, and he's the lowest of the group in the regular-season points standings. Teammate Ross Chastain is eighth and has one victory; Shane van Gisbergen, who won in Chicago on Sunday, is 27th; while Suarez in 29th.

Addressing the possibility of bad blood, Marks spoke of meeting with Suarez on Saturday night, with the two reminiscing about their years together.

"Him and I are in a really good place."

Trackhouse and Suarez have previously called the parting a "mutual decision" that allows the veteran driver the chance to pursue another opportunity for next season. Marks echoed that sentiment Sunday, while also acknowledging the need to make a change.

"Look, Daniel has been a huge part of this company for four and a half years now," Marks said. "This isn't a sport where you do the same thing forever."

In an interview with SiriusXM NASCAR Radio, Suarez spoke of this being a new chapter for him.

"I have known about this for a while," Suarez said. "I'm actually a little bit relieved that this is out and people know about it and we can talk about it and we can move forward with future plans and continue to work. I'm excited for whatever comes next."

Suarez, 33, has won two races in 305 Cup starts. This is his fifth season with Trackhouse Racing, and he has made the play-offs twice. His best season was in 2022, when he finished 10th and won his first Cup Series race. He finished 12th last season, winning his second race in the process.

Trackhouse has yet to name a replacement for the No. 99 Chevrolet.
