both came to an amicable agreement. I asked him how much sugar was in an Apple Fritter, and he told me. I asked if he could make the sugar free instead of paying for it. After all, if all the sugar is free, then according to The Gracious Mistress of the Parsonage, it is okay for me to eat.

I tried explaining to her that sugar is always free whenever I buy an Apple Fritter, so technically speaking, the Apple fritters I purchase at my bakery are sugar-free.

How to be simpler than that is beyond my resources. She didn't accept that argument and seriously said, "That is not what I'm talking about. The sugar in that Apple Fritter is dangerous to your health."

Apart from The Gracious Mistress of the Parsonage, nothing is sweeter than an Apple Fritter. Whether I pay for the sugar or it comes free doesn't really matter to me. Honestly, I don't eat Apple fritters every day. I am very disciplined when it comes to my diet. I can't explain my frequency for obvious reasons.

Once in a while, I have this inward yearning for an Apple Fritter. If I haven't had one in some time, I begin thinking about it and am famished for one.

Controlling my diet at my age is very important. I'm not as young or skinny as I once was. I understand that and realize I cannot eat like I am 18. But sometimes, I need to enjoy something that will nourish my current enthusiasm. Several things come to my mind, but the first thing is an Apple Fritter.

I'm not sure who invented the Apple Fritter, but I'd like to meet them someday, shake their hand, and thank them.

The Gracious Mistress of the Parsonage and I will celebrate our 54th wedding anniversary this August. Amazingly, we've been together this long, and our only disagreement during that time has been the Apple Fritters/broccoli controversy. That's a remarkable accomplishment, especially in the day we live.

So, if I gave up Apple Fritters, we would have no disagreements. What kind of life would that be?

While thinking about this a favorite verse of Scripture came to mind. "Can two walk together, except they be agreed?" (Amos 3:3)

It's not so much what you don't agree on but rather on what you do agree on. That's what brings to people together.
