BY ND&L STAFF

Kentucky is joining transportation agencies across the eastern United States this week to promote driver safety and prevent collisions with low-clearance bridges, according to a news release from the governor's office.

The "Check Your Height, Know It's Right" campaign runs today through Saturday and encourages drivers of commercial trucks, rental vans, RVs, and other vehicles to be aware of their vehicle's height to avoid striking overpasses.

"Whether driving is your career, you're moving here, or enjoying a Kentucky vacation, knowing your vehicle's height can help protect you," Gov. Andy Beshear said in the release. "Along with buckling up, following speed limits, and eliminating distractions behind the wheel, it's an important step in staying safe on the road."

According to the Kentucky Transportation Cabinet, so-called bridge hits can damage infrastructure and vehicles, cause delays, and endanger the public and emergency responders.

"To reduce that risk, all drivers should know the height of their vehicle and be observant for and comply with posted low-clearance signs," said Transportation Secretary Jim Gray. "We should all watch for and adhere first to signage indicating bridge heights and not rely solely on navigation devices or apps."

The Transportation Cabinet is supporting the campaign in coordination with the Eastern Transportation Coalition, a partnership of 19 states and Washington, D.C., aimed at improving safety and efficiency. The initiative builds on a program developed by the New York State Department of Transportation.

The campaign targets commercial and non-commercial drivers, including those operating leased box trucks, recreation-vehicles, and vehicles hauling equipment or livestock trailers. A typical
