equipment and a full baseball complex. I would also have strong interest in additional land acquisitions for future business and industrial opportunities.

2. What could the county do to encourage young adults to remain in Harrison County?

LEWIS: I talked to a few young families about this question. In order to encourage our young adults to stay in Harrison County, we need to have affordable housing, family entertainment, and good schools. I do feel like places to work is important, but I also feel like people will choose to live in Harrison County and drive out of town to work if all these other boxes are being checked. Our young families want nice places to go eat, see a movie, watch a game, take the kids to play, etc. Our young families want to feel safe where they raise their children which includes adequately trained and fully staffed fire, police and emergency responders.

YEARSLEY: I truly believe we are already building a strong foundation for our young adults to remain in Harrison County if they choose to do so. We are adding housing, although not as fast as I would like. We are adding industry and career opportunities. Our current industrial park has only one lot left, and we have purchased additional land for future business opportunities.

We have built a beautiful recreation center for our children's future that has the capability to be expanded over time. We have added affordable, high-speed fiber, Internet capabilities to all homes in our county, which will allow for a changing workforce that offers the option to work from home.

3. Describe a situation when you dealt with opposing groups whose needs conflicted with one another. What was your solution?

LEWIS: I think anyone that has raised children has experienced a time when the needs of two different groups conflicted with each other. Listening and compromising are important at home, at work and especially for leaders. You are never going to make everyone happy, but you do need to make decisions that best benefit everyone involved.

YEARSLEY: In my tenure as a magistrate we have had some mild conflicts, but never any severe ones. One that comes to mind was during Covid. Many of the local businesses did not agree with the state mandates on closures. We as county officials listened the best we could to our community and communicated those concerns with state officials. I believe we did have an influence on the state level decisions being changed and some of the closures being lifted.

4. If the budget falls short, where would you propose making cuts?

LEWIS: If the budget falls short, I don't think cuts need to be made in just one area. Through my experience working in county government, I know the county has funds budgeted to help with shortfalls, but should a shortfall occur that wasn't expected nor planned for — I think budget cutting across the board is the best idea. Take a little from all funds so no one area suffers greatly.

YEARSLEY: We are extremely fortunate to have an outstanding county treasurer who gives us all the information we need to make sound financial decisions and operate within our budget. She also operates with a safe contingency fund that would allow for emergency situations to avoid a budget short fall. Even during Covid, when things were completely unstable, our budget was secure.
