Tips to create a weather-resilient backyard

As extreme weather events and unpredictable storms become the new normal, homeowners are looking for ways to safeguard their properties. According to the TurfMutt Foundation, which advocates for the care and use of managed green spaces, homeowners can help their property—and family and pets—bounce back quickly after a storm with a few proactive steps.

off, combat erosion and provide vital shelter for wildlife,” says Kris Kiser, President and CEO of the TurfMutt Foundation. “By investing a little time into maintenance and smart landscape choices, we can build resilient outdoor spaces that stand up to severe weather.”

The TurfMutt Foundation offers the following tips to storm proof the landscape:

Maintain the “Living Sponge”

A healthy lawn acts like a natural filtration and drainage system, capturing stormwater runoff and reducing erosion. Choose the right grass for your microclimate and lifestyle, mow to the appropriate height for your species, and water wisely to keep the “living sponge” of your lawn healthy.

Keep Water Moving

Make sure gutters, downspouts and drainage paths are free of leaves, twigs and other yard debris. Adding a strategically-placed, shallow rain garden of native vegetation can capture stormwater runoff and allow it to safely soak into the ground.

Tend to Your Trees

Downed branches can quickly damage roofs, vehicles and powerlines. Healthy, well-pruned trees are less likely to break and cause harm during a storm. Take on the task yourself or hire a professional.

When planting in your yard, choose native trees, shrubs and grasses. These plants are adapted to your local climate, which means they'll be more resistant to winds and flooding. The right plants that thrive in your microclimate also can support pollinators and other backyard wildlife.

Clear the Projectiles

When you know a storm is about to hit, survey your yard for items that could turn into dangerous hazards. Secure patio furniture, umbrellas, grills, trash cans and other items. Move potted plants inside.

“Storm-proofing isn't just about immediate preparation, it's also about long-term stewardship,” Kiser adds. “A healthy yard is a resilient yard that ensures your favorite green space is ready for backyarding fun again as soon as the sun comes out.”
