Solar Moratorium cont. from pg. 1

it could be changed to better address the needs of the community. The 1st reading passed by a vote of 4-2.

Nicholas County resident and Carpenter Pike landowner Kathy Myers, who had signed a lease with Heelstone, attended his past Friday's special-called meeting and spoke to the court about the benefits of renewable energy and encouraged the members of the court to vote no on the 2nd reading of the moratorium. She also mentioned visiting the website, www.southforksolarproject.com, to ask questions or voice any concerns.

Magistrate Ross Haney asked Judge-Exec. Hamilton that if the court passed the one-year moratorium, could the court eventually lift the moratorium at a later date, after addressing the concerns and receiving answers regarding solar projects in the community, and not have to wait the one-year period to take action on the issue. Judge-Exec. Hamilton placed a phone call to County Attorney Dawn Letcher to ask that specific question and she agreed that the one-year moratorium could be lifted at a later date, but not the initial ordinance that was passed by the court in June 2024.

The court approved the 2nd reading by a vote of 5-1, with Magistrate Hughes voting no.

The meeting was subsequently adjourned.

Do you support large-scale solar farms in Nicholas County?

Phyllis Albright – "I am for solar, but I am against putting large solar panels on the farms. I feel that not only is it an eyesore to the farms surrounding the area, but I feel there would be a lot of stuff left behind if they ever decide to move on."

Megan Anderson – "I've never really cared about it until recently. But with regulations, I would be for them."

Tim Hunt – "Maybe if they were in the right place. I could see that it would help things, but just like anything people get behind, they eventually abuse. They can't leave nothing alone."

Gene Kelley – "I don't know enough about them, so I don't really have an opinion."
